RIVER POLLUTERS

Fine not enough, jail them too

Recommends river commission; unveils annual report

ZUMA ISLAM

River polluters should be not only fined but also punished with jail terms, recommends the National River Conservation Commission.

The recommendation has been incorporated in the draft amendment to National River Conservation Commission Act, 2013, NRCC Chairman Muzibur Rahman Howlader said yesterday, while unveiling the commission's annual report.

He also said river grabbing is regarded as a criminal offence, but polluters get away only by paying fines. "They are the owners of major industries, and we need to make sure that they are sent to jail for polluting the rivers.

"We all should show zero tolerance against discharge of waste into the rivers."

While issuing a rule, the High Court on January 29 had also recommended considering river pollution as a criminal offence and handing tougher punishment to the offenders.

The HC came up with the rule in response to a petition seeking declaration that the Turag is a living entity.

The river commission's annual report was launched at a press conference at its office in the capital yesterday.

THE YEAR IN REVIEW: CORRUPTION

Big fish still off anti-graft radar

ACC actions were mostly confined to prosecuting low and mid-level officials

MAHBUBUR RAHMAN KHAN

Charging the wrong person, bribe scam involving its own official, going soft on the influential corrupt people, and graft charges against political leaders and government officials kept the Anti-Corruption Commission a hot topic in 2019.

As the year began, the ACC came under fire for its mistake in identifying a corruption case accused that led to jute-mill worker Jahalam to suffer three years in prison.

By mid-2019, the commission was again in the soup as one of its directors taking bribe came to the fore.

In July, the ACC sued its director Khandaker Enamul Basir, now suspended, for taking Tk 40 lakh bribe from suspended deputy inspector general of police Mizanur Rahman.

Mizan brought the allegation against Basir and had said he bribed Basir so that he be let off graft allegations against him.

However, the government's drive against illegal casino operators gave the ACC a chance to recover its image.

The anti-graft watchdog also filed 17 cases
