A woman walks to a latrine -- the sorry-looking structure made from crumpled corrugated tin sheets -- with a small water-pot in hand for ablution. The photo was taken yesterday from a slum in the capital’s Sher-e-Bangla Nagar area, but the situation is not much different in any of the settlement in the capital.

DEPLORABLE SANITATION CONDITIONS IN DHAKA SLUMS

Women bear the brunt of it

NILIMA JAHAN

Thirty-year-old Aklima Akter of Mirpur’s Duaripara slum shares her tiny and slippery “hanging latrine” with over 80 people in her neighbourhood. The latrine is made out of tin and installed above a waterbody. It allows feces to fall through a pipe and contaminate the water. In absence of running water and hand-washing facilities, Aklima and her neighbours depend on one wash jug (bodna) of water to clean themselves after defecation. During menstruation, it becomes more challenging for the poorest of the poor like Aklima to wash unsanitary rags inside the tiny space with such a small amount of water. If she goes out to collect another wash jug of water, she hears taunting words from the male neighbours. Duaripara slum houses around 6,000 families, where most of the inhabitants pull rickshaws, work in garments or as domestic help, or run small businesses. There are only 40 community toilets in the slum, while the rest are unsanitary hanging latrines. “In the morning, there is a long queue outside the latrine, and people like me who stay home usually don’t get any chance to use the toilet for long periods. Most of the time, I pile up my damp rags inside the room, and when there is lesser rush, I wash those to use further,” said Aklima. Although it causes discomfort, itching, irritation and urinary tract infections (UTI), Aklima says with certainty that “she has no other options.” The scenario is similar in the Kalshi and Wapda slums in Mirpur. During recent visits, a large number of women and schoolgoing girls were seen sharing hanging latrines. The challenges of sanitation have intensified since a large number of women workers lost their jobs in the pandemic (mostly RMG workers and domestic help) and schools have been shut for almost a year. According to a 2018 World Bank report, about 50 million people in Bangladesh use shared, rudimentary toilets and only 28 percent of toilets are equipped with soap and water. Access to clean water, adequate and equitable sanitation and hygiene for all, with special attention to

“Dentists in Bangladesh are now far more adept at treating major dental diseases”

Professor Dr Syed Morshed Moula
Head of Dental Unit
Dhaka Community Medical College

There has been tremendous development in every sector of the country. As part of the dentistry community, would you say there has been similar development in the oral healthcare sector?

In the past, there were not sufficient institutes in the country offering a degree in Bachelor of Dental Surgery (BDS). All over Bangladesh, we only had one dental college situated in Dhaka. But this scenario slowly changed with time. At present, there are around 20 dental colleges in Bangladesh offering the BDS degree. This expansion in the dentistry education sector has resulted in increase in knowledge regarding oral and dental healthcare as well. One very good trend we have observed is that nowadays parents are concerned about their children’s oral health from a very early age and they conduct regular dentist visits. We believe that accessibility to better oral healthcare treatment has caused this rapid increase in awareness among the general populace. We are now far more adept at treating all major dental diseases and disorders. As a result, many people are living healthier and happier lives.

What steps would you suggest everyone to take in order to properly care for their teeth and oral health?

It does not require much effort or money to properly care for one’s teeth. All it requires is the maintenance of proper oral hygiene. The only way we can keep our mouth and teeth clean is by regularly brushing our teeth. I recommend brushing twice a day; once in the morning and once before bed. I consider regular brushing to be a form of vaccination for the teeth, as it acts as the primary prevention mechanism against various ailments and diseases. Along with regular and proper brushing of the teeth, it is just as important to monitor one’s diet. Foods high in refined sugar in particular can have damaging effects on one’s dental health and may lead to diseases such as gingivitis.

Teeth sensitivity has been a major topic of debate in recent times. What are the signs of someone suffering from sensitive teeth? How can we combat teeth sensitivity?

What we need to understand first is the difference between the terms sensitivity and hypersensitivity. Everyone’s teeth are more or less sensitive to environmental stimuli. Our teeth are naturally sensitive to foods and drinks that are too hot or too cold. But, if your teeth hurt when you bite into a cold ice cream or when you drink hot soup, your teeth might be suffering from hypersensitivity. This is when the outer coating of our teeth, called the enamel, gets damaged.

There are various reasons for this hypersensitivity starting from unhealthy, food habits to wrong brushing techniques. I recommend using anti-sensitivity toothpaste in order to combat this hypersensitivity. Along with that, it is also necessary to use the right set of toothbrush with soft bristles to ensure protection of the enamel.

Recently, we saw a campaign circulating called “Not a BDS, not a dentist”. What is the purpose behind this campaign?

The main purpose behind this campaign is saving people from quack doctors. A lot of people work in this profession although they do not have the necessary qualifications. It is very difficult for the ordinary person to judge whether the dentist they are going to has a proper educational background or not. Through this campaign we hope to shed light on this issue. At least a BDS degree is necessary in order to be a dental surgeon and treat patients.
