Hefajat men did it divided in 7 groups

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Brahmanbaria

Hefajat men unleashed mayhem in Brahmanbaria during their hartal on Sunday after being divided into seven groups, according to locals and police

Five of the groups damaged and carried out arson attacks on establishments, including the land office, police lines, a music academy, municipality office and public library. They also attacked a Hindu temple and the local press club.

All these establishments are situated on the northern side of the Town Khal (canal).

The other two groups carried out attacks on establishments on the other side of the canal. They ransacked the district council building, torched vehicles and houses of some Awami League and

One of the groups blocked rail tracks in Dakshin Poirotola area of the town around 10:00am on Sunday, forcing Sonar Bangla Express to stop.

Later, the Hefajat men attacked the train, leaving at least 10 passengers injured, said locals and railway sources.

The Hefajat supporters damaged the locomotive, broke 117 windows, and vandalised 15 carriages of the train, said Brahmanbaria Station Master Md Shoyeb Ahmed.

Police have collected CCTV footage. After analysing the footage, they believe Hefajat men carried out the attacks in a planned way after being divided into

DU teacher Samia Rahman sues unknown people under DSA

COURT CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka University teacher Samia Rahman yesterday sued some unknown people under the Digital Security Act for what she claimed was feeding a DU probe body false and fabricated information.

She filed the case against one Alex Martin of the University of Chicago Press Journal, who she said was made up person, and others with the Cyber Tribunal of Dhaka, said Shamim Al Mamun, bench assistant of the tribunal.

Judge Mohammad Ash Sams Joglul Hossain of the tribunal took the case into cognisance and recorded the complainant's statements, Mamun told The Daily Star.

The tribunal will pass an order today (April 1) in this regard, Mamun

In the case statements, the complainant said that an email -- said to be from the University of Chicago Press Journal -- based on which the DU probe body on September 15, 2017, recommended her demotion from associate professor to assistant professor, bringing allegations of over plagiarism, was fake and fabricated.

The complainant said the email was sent to the DU probe body by Alex Martin but it was learnt that no one by that name worked in the journal after she communicated with the journal authorities.

Some people creating a fake email ID circulated fake and fabricated information about the complainant, the case statements added.

HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS

US state department paints bleak picture least 251 returning migrant workers from

In its annual report on the global state of human rights, the US Department of State documented in-depth the violations happening in Bangladesh. The report is an ann documentation of the state of human rights across the world and it acts as resource for its foreign policy. The extra-judicial killing of Major Sinha Rashed Khan was highlighted as an exemplary case of the state of "unlawful" or "arbitrary" killings in 2020. "Suspicious deaths occurred during some raids, arrests, and other law ntorcement operations. Security forces frequently accounted for such deaths by claiming -- when they took a suspect in custody to a crime scene to recover weapons or identify coconspirators -accomplices fired on police and killed the suspect," said the report. The report pointed that custodial torture is still very much a reality in the case of Bangladesh, pointing out the case of Teknaf-based journalist Faridul Mostafa as an example. Mostafa was kept in custody by former officer-in-charge of the police station for 11 months. "Mostafa was arrested on September 2019 and according to his wife, tortured in custody. When Mostafa appeared in court three days after his arrest, his wife said his hands and legs were broken, and the nails of his fingers and toes were pulled out. His eyesight had been badly affected by red chili powder rubbed in his eyes and he was forced to drink sewage water, causing severe diarrhea," said the report.

Hand-in-hand with extrajudicial killings and torture, a culture of arbitrary arrests further muddy the rights situation, implied the report. The report mentioned the arrest of the Middle-east migrant worker returnees as an example of how arbitrary arrests can be used to disenfranchise people. "Government authorities arrested at [Bangladesh]," said the report.

"However, human rights groups characterised these requests as specious and said while some of the returning workers were jailed abroad, they had all either completed their sentences or had their sentences commuted due to Covid-19," said the report. The report also paints a bleak picture of the situation of worker rights. "The law continued to ban trade unions and severely restricted the right to organise and bargain collectively for the nearly 500,000 workers in export processing zones (EPZs).

"The government reported nine complaints were filed for unfair labour practices; three were resolved according to the law and standard operating procedures, six remained open, and no employers were penalised," said the report. It documented meticulously how labour unions fail to adequately represent the rights of workers.

Pertaining to migrant workers, the report said, "The government does not provide sufficient victim protective services, nor does it consistently follow victim identification procedures. There are no government-owned shelters for adult male victims.

In addition, the report clamped on the state of indigenous rights by stating, "No land disputes were resolved during the year." It mentioned the state's pledge to solve land disputes and demilitarise the Chattogram Hill Tracts, and how that commitment is yet to be kept.

The report also documented the state of women's rights, LGBTI rights and
