Junta slammed for deaths of over 40 kids

Internet blackout widens; military accused of 'forced disappearance' of hundreds of people

AGENCIES

Myanmar's junta faced fresh international criticism yesterday over the deaths of more than 40 children and the "forced disappearance" of hundreds of people in its crackdown on pro-democracy protests.

The military's ruthless suppression of demonstrations against its February 1 power grab has left 543 civilians dead, including 44 children, according to the Assistance Association for Political Prisoners (AAPP), a local monitoring organisation.

As well as breaking up protests with tear gas, rubber bullets and live rounds, security forces have detained some 2,700 people.

Violence has ramped up in recent weeks, with Save the Children saying the death toll of youngsters had more than doubled in the past 12 days.

"We are shocked that children continue to be among the targets of these fatal attacks, despite repeated calls to protect children from harm," the charity said in a statement.

"It is especially horrifying that several of these children were reportedly killed at home, where they should have been safe from harm."

BRITONS TELL OF KILLING Some of the 102 Britons who were evacuated to Singapore by air yesterday from East Pakistan revealed today the fighting and carnage they had seen.

"Each day I could see fresh groups of bodies piled up on the pavements," said one man who had been an employee of the East Pakistani provincial government. "There were men, women, even babies, with bayonet and gunshot wounds. Some appeared to have been crushed."

"The deaths were all at the hands of troops from West Pakistan," he said. "There was fear the bodies would pollute the water supply."

There was shooting "every night, up to the time I left," the Briton declared. "The smell of death is still everywhere, and every night there are fires on the skyline." [New York Times, April 04, 1971]

UNITY AT GUNPOINT

In a report titled 'Unity at gunpoint' The Economist wrote today: "East Pakistan's Sheikh Mujib looks a loser today, but it is more likely that President Yahya has chosen the road that leads to a civil war he cannot win."

It further commented: "But though he may have pacified the main cities, shattered the Awami leadership and cowed many Bengalis into submissiveness, President Yahya's problems are only just beginning. He will find it difficult to police the countryside; much of East

Archaeologists working on the Yorkshire coast have unearthed the oldest salt-making complex ever found in western Europe, in a discovery that is set to revolutionise our understanding of prehistoric Britain's economy.

Dating back almost 6,000 years, the site - complete with salt-making kilns, or hearths - predates the oldest previously known British salt "factory" by almost 2,400 years.

The discovery has huge implications for our understanding of how Neolithic Britain's

India fears worse 2nd Covid wave

3.7m vaccinated in a day as the country sees record rise in cases in six months

AGENCIES

India is staring at coronavirus pandemic second wave which may turn out to be worse than the first one, officials feared yesterday, as the country stepped up inoculation drive amid record number of cases.

It was noted during a high-level meeting presided by Indian Cabinet Secretary Rajiv Gauba that the current Covid case growth rate of 6.8 percent in March this year has surpassed the previous record of 5.5 percent in June last year, reported our New Delhi correspondent.

The country also reported 5.5 percent growth rate in daily Covid deaths in this period.

While India was reporting about 97,000 daily new Covid cases at the peak of the pandemic in September last year, the country has already reached the critical figure 81,000 daily new cases.

With coronavirus cases surging, India has ramped up its vaccination drive with more than 36.7 lakh people taking the jab in a single day, as global surge in infections brought new restrictions.

The record setting numbers came on a day when India reported 81,466 fresh cases, the highest daily number in six months. In the last 24 hours, eight states -- Maharashtra, Chhattisgarh, Karnataka, Punjab, Tamil Nadu, Kerala, Delhi and Uttar Pradesh -- recorded a sharp surge in the daily new cases, together contributing 81.25 percent of the new cases.

In the last 76 days since the inoculation programme began, India has administered more than 68.7 million
