Old Books

After years of procrastination, I recently hired a carpenter to make several bookshelves. Once they were made, I took out books that I had stored in cartons – some for a decade – and filled the shelves with them. It was an experience of unexpected joy and self-discovery.

As I was organizing the books and looking through them many thoughts crowded my head.

Books have always been a big part of my life. Going to the bookstore, browsing through books, smelling them, and eventually bringing some home – these have added comfort and excitement to my life. But books are also an open-ended quest. Who is to say what the ultimate goal is? Is it to enjoy a story? Expand my mind and skills? Insert myself into a world created by a storyteller?

Like others, I have gone through phases. My old books made that clear. There was the ideological phase of student days, reflected in works by Fanon, Said, and others. There was a literature phase: Joyce, Beckett, Steinbeck, Carver, Bowles. There was a phase of reading letters and essays, including those of Syed Mujtaba Ali, Steinbeck, Montaigne, White, Plutarch. For some years I enjoyed travel writing by Theroux, Bryson, O'Hanlon, Danziger and others. More recently, reflecting my interest in birds and wildlife, I have read about the natural world in books by Abbey, Leopold, Audobon, Muir.

Among my old books I found photography monographs, photography collections of a mix of photographer, and essays on photography. I collected these consistently over the last four decades. Some photography essays have come to be considered classics, for example, those by Berger, Sontag, and Barthes. Others which were instant hits upon publication now look dated.

These books are usually polemical, championing social or political issues of the time. Individual photographers – and their monographs – have come and gone at the whim of critics, curators and photographic kingmakers.

Some books also take me through phases in an author's life. For example, Paul Theroux, the renowned travel writer, whose early books such as The Great Railway Bazaar created excitement because they represented the world before globalization when it was hard to reach many places. Over the years the world became easier to travel in. Theroux kept on choosing difficult routes, but he also became increasingly cynical. Bill Bryson burst in with A Walk in the Woods, about a long hike on the Appalachian Trail. Then he went on to write about a wide variety of topics.

I always bought more than I could read. As a result I have dozens of unread books lying in my shelves. Why did I not read them? Some were hard going and I was hesitant to start – mostly Classics. Sometimes I bought so many books at once that I forgot about some. Some books are unread because they are bad. I keep wondering why they are still here in my bookshelf. Mysteriously, I found double copies of some authors I liked, such as Henning Mankell or Ray Carver.

As an added bonus, fast-moving thrillers or detective books, read in one night many years ago, are as good as new because I have forgotten the stories.

For the younger generation today, electronic books and social media are more exciting than paper books. But for me, nothing will ever replace good old-fashioned books made of paper.

Most of Dhaka cleaned up promptly after Eid

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

After Eid-ul-Azha, Dhaka city could be cleaned within three days through the efforts of the two city corporations and city dwellers.

However, animal waste was seen in some places on the third day of Eid yesterday.

Residents were encouraged to maintain proper disposal and clean their surroundings with bleach, which could be seen in many areas. Meanwhile, many also expressed satisfaction over the city corporations' prompt steps.

"After sacrificing our cattle, we cleaned the area and left the waste roadside, which were collected by the conservancy workers quickly," said Mohammad Jamil of Eskaton.

Earlier, the two mayors of the city had announced that they would ensure that garbage will be completely cleaned in three days.

Dhaka South City Corporation (DSCC) has cleaned up 1,240.7 tonnes of animal and cattle market waste in the last three days till yesterday morning, while Dhaka North City Corporation (DNCC) cleaned up 15,733 tonnes during this time, according to officials.

DSCC Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh on Thursday said their garbage management workers have been working since the night of July 20.

DNCC Mayor Md Atiqul Islam, while visiting different areas on Thursday, said they have cleaned all animal waste on the first day of Eid.

WASTE REMOVED	CONSERVANCY WORKERS
DSCC 1,240.7 TONNES	9,990
DNCC 15,733 TONNES	11,500

Atiqul said around 11,500 conservancy workers were cleaning DNCC areas. Cleaning the city was possible due to cooperation of city dwellers, he added.

He said they have set up a control room at Gulshan Nagar Bhaban and were using it and their "Shobar Dhaka" app to clean the city.

He said they have distributed 6.5 lakh garbage bags, 50 tonnes of bleaching powder, and five-litre sized 1,500 containers of disinfectant to residents.

Meanwhile, around 9,990 conservancy workers were cleaning DSCC areas, said its officials, adding that they have distributed 30 tonnes of bleaching powder, 1.20 lakh garbage bags and 1,800-litre disinfectant to residents.

Although Dhaka's two city corporations cleaned up most of the areas, animal waste was seen at some places on the third day of Eid.

During a visit to Old Dhaka's Dholaikhal, Sutrapur, Distillery Road and North South Road areas, animal waste was seen piled up at some points. Garbage management workers and dump trucks were active to clean the solid waste.

The places were still in a bad condition, as cattle markets were set up on the roads, said locals. Bad smell emanating from the piles spread throughout the areas.

Even after fully cleaning the city, the reality is that residents dump waste again at open spaces that were just cleaned, said Mayor Taposh.

He requested city dwellers to collect garbage bags, fill them with waste and give them to the workers.
