

Jeff Bezos named baldest rich man alive; locals believe they have better candidates

MAHBUB ALAM MUNNA

Amazon billionaire Jeff Bezos was named the baldest rich man alive, but that has raised an outcry around the world – especially in Chapasthan.

Amid immense populist challenge, Jeff Bezos is on the verge of losing his long-held position to a Chapasthan policeman, another bald-headed man who once had hair in the millions. He is now bald, and has also accumulated massive wealth in different countries.

Whenever we talk about Bezos, we tend to talk about his wealth. That sort of affluent-ist stereotype has to be left behind, said a pedestrian in Dhoka, adding that it now must be ensured that he doesn't also become baldest rich guy.

We should know that Bezos can be compared with others based on things other than his wealth, such as the amount of hair on his head or his shiny, Amaz-on-ing chrome dome.

The judges of the award, Balffluent 2021, are still deciding which aspect to focus on – the thinning or lack of hair or the fattening of wallets – when deciding the winner.

Now Bezos, despite his billions, is in doubt and absolute fear about losing his position to a person who is totally unknown. That's the beauty of hair and the dollop of embezzlement – humble follicles and offshore riches can make the richest and baldest person insecure.

Meanwhile, the Chapasthan policeman seems angry. He did not like the idea of being compared based on hair or lack thereof, even if it is with Bezos.

While Jeff Bezos's position is under constant threat from the policeman, another challenger appeared to exacerbate Bezos's follicle-challenged headache.

Bruhsell, the owner of an infamous e-commerce platform in Chapasthan, appeared from nowhere.

Bruhsell is all about potential. His head has a bit of hair, but everyone thinks that it would soon all be lost. The promise – just like the promise of millions of deliveries on his e-commerce platform – was there.

"Also, as soon as I lose the rest of my hair, it will make me more aerodynamic and I can climb up the ladder faster," Bruhsell said.

"Man, the way Chapasthan people are pushing me, I may fail to get myself into the top ten, let alone the top three. Although the new guy Bruhsell looks less threatening as he still has some hair, I am sure that he will get rid of it overnight to outperform us," Jeff Bezos expressed his fear fearlessly.

People are enjoying the competition -- the less the hair on the head, the higher the chance to be champion, they think. As two Chapasthan heads are causing a headache for the world's most known billionaire, the two heads are becoming more known by the day.

A local Chapasthan biker, while pushing his bike on the footpath, said joyfully, "Kick Bezos out of his position. We Chapasthan people deserve top position always, especially when it comes to corruption."

Notorious e-commerce platform brings in 'foreign investments'

Last Friday, renowned business guru and founder of E-Gorge, Bruhsell Bromad, announced to thousands of his followers and fanboys through his Facebook live stream that E-Gorge had finally procured some foreign investment.

This came months after regulatory bodies had been pursuing E-Gorge on the basis of what they termed "fraudulent activities".

Bruhsell sat in his signature gaming chair and wiped away the tears on his face after being dogged by regulatory bodies and journalists for months on end. The webcam light bounced off the disco ball on his forehead, branded with E-Gorge stickers in typical Bruhsell fashion.

"Let's get thing one out of the way," he said, pointing to the disco ball, "this is on sale at E-Gorge.com with a 99% discount for all of my fans."

"Now, let's talk about E-Gorge. No one believed in me. People bullied me online, calling me a fraud. Nobody believed me when I said I just needed more time to ensure E-Gorge could deliver its backlog of two years' worth of orders. Well, now we have procured one the largest foreign investments of all time! A Chinese investment company will be injecting us with $550 billion!! The Genius Book of World Records has already contacted me and I will be receiving my plaque, delivered by E-Gorge parcel service shortly," said Bruhsell.

The livestream was flooded with likes and heart reacts as long-time fans of E-Gorge and Bruhsell celebrated in the comment sections declaring every news agency and government entity to ever ridicule E-Gorge as "dalals".

But some people were still looking for answers. A few viewers asked for details of the investing company and when they would be receiving products they had ordered in 2019.

"The company's name is ---uh--- it's Pawnzi Ltd. They're a company out of China and they could not wait to invest in us after seeing our business model," Bruhsell said, putting his hand in front of his mouth, choking on what people could only assume to be tears of joy.

Viewers, at this point, started commenting about the white board with a triangle drawn in marker. Bruhsell moved it out of the frame quickly before reassuring viewers that it was only a new business model that they had been working on. Many fans of Bruhsell have since speculated that it might be the Illuminati sign, as only that can explain how a man from such a humble background could reach such heights.

"Now, for everyone who believed in me and are still waiting for me to deliver their products, I will explain the procedure to get your products in the second quarter of the next year. Firstly, you'll need to draw a pentagram on your floor using some red paint. Then you need to switch off your lights and burn and delete both physical and digital copies of all of your receipts by candlelight. Once you are done, send the video to my Telergaam ID, and you will receive your products soon," he said, and followed up by whispering, "terms and conditions apply."

Tali-Ban ready to deploy peacekeepers in Southeast Asian countries plagued by US bullying

INTERNATIONAL SPACE STATION CORRESPONDENT

In support of allies China, a spokesperson of Tali-ban -- a religious organisation which shoots on site anyone who is seen clapping in joy --- on Thursday has declared that the group is ready to deploy peacekeepers in Southeast Asian countries bullied by the United States.

The comments were made at another one of Tali-Ban's eye-opening visionary press briefings where they announced a string of new financial commitments made by Beijing.

"We are always ready to support all Southeast Asian countries plagued by US rule. We will not impose ourselves on them. We will carry out peacekeeping missions by imposing it on ourselves first, and then presenting it as an example to them -- that is the Tali-Ban vision of governance," said the unnamed but fully armed spokesperson.

While answering questions, the spokesperson also said their vision for the future has already been outlined in religion. "The rules are very clear, and we are in consultation right now to figure out what policies we can draft."

When pressed about China's treatment of the Uighurs -- who follow the same religion of which Tali-Ban says they are the sole guardians -- in Xinjiang, the spokesperson ended the press briefing, exited the building while firing stray shots at protesting women.

In a separate yet related development (go figure) the country's former President Ashlo Bhagi apologised to his countrymen for fleeing the country with millions in cash when the Tali-Ban took over.

"I did it for peace of my people," he said in a televised address. He however did not know that the microphone was still recording after the interview ended and he said: "By my people I mean my family, and by peace I mean the comfort only millions can buy.... Am I right, am I right or am I right?"
