Nasum Ahmed is all ears as Bangladesh's spin bowling coach Rangana Herath makes a point during training at the Sher-e-Bangla Stadium. It will be interesting to see if the in-form left-arm spinner can continue his form in the upcoming T20 World Cup where the pitches are unlikely to be as favourable to the spinners as it was in Mirpur.

A BLIP OR A PRECURSOR?

NABID YEASIN

Getting a winning tonic ahead of the T20 World Cup in Oman and the UAE was all that Bangladesh had apparently planned for and with three series wins on the trot -- away to Zimbabwe followed by wins at home over Australia and New Zealand -- the Tigers now head to the T20 extravaganza in their richest vein of form ever in the format.

The caveat is that most of Bangladesh's recent T20I triumphs came playing in favourable conditions at Mirpur, where surfaces were mostly tailor-made to enhance the hosts' abilities.

However, with media, fans and experts questioning the benefits that the Tigers could expect to reap from wins in such favourable conditions, the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) prepared a sporting wicket for the fifth and final T20I against New Zealand on Friday.

The behaviour of the pitch at the Sher-e-Bangla National Stadium in the fifth T20I stood in stark contrast to the way the surface had played in the previous nine T20Is at the venue. It may also be enough to put an end to the claim that the Mirpur surface is a typical spinning track and that there are very little to no ways to improve the behavior of the pitch.

Right-arm quick Taskin Ahmed was getting ample carry and movement off the pitch from the very beginning while clocking speeds as high as 141kmph. And with the pitch offering uniform bounce instead of gripping and holding the ball back unexpectedly -- as it did in the previous nine T20Is -- batsmen were able to play their shots while bowlers had to be shrewd even as they introduced variations and bowled slower deliveries.

The most unfortunate part was that the Tigers, who had dominated proceedings throughout the last two series, acted meekly and their discernable batting failure saw them succumb to a 27-run defeat.

Meanwhile, the one time in the entire series that they got the opportunity to show their ability on a true sporting wicket, an inexperienced New Zealand side showed their superiority over Bangladesh in the T20 format.

Bangladesh, who already had the five-match series in the bag, rested regular starters like Shakib Al Hasan and Mustafizur Rahman along with all-rounders Mohammad Saifuddin and Mahedi Hasan. But that could still not justify their slump to four for 46 in 8.5 overs in chase of a challenging 162.

New Zealand's 161 for five was the highest total in the last 11 T20Is at the venue. Is it that the Tigers, who have not had the need to score more than seven an over for most of their games on slow and gripping Mirpur pitches in the recent past, crumbled when asked to chase a total in a range that is considered par for the course in modern-day T20 cricket around the world?

If so, it probably is time for the harsh reality that the 'winning momentum' gained from the crushing 4-1 of the Aussies and a 3-2 series win over the Kiwis will not amount to much in the upcoming T20 World Cup, where the surfaces are expected to be sporting and competition to be much fiercer.

Tigers set for extended rest

SPORTS REPORTER

After securing three T20I series wins on the trot against Zimbabwe, Australia and New Zealand, Bangladesh are about to dive into a long break ahead of the T20 World Cup, scheduled to be held in the UAE and Oman from October 17.

The Tigers will not have a training camp in the country, but will instead set up camp for the mega-event upon arrival in Oman on October 3.

All coaching staff and players in the 15-member squad, those on break or otherwise engaged -- such as Shakib Al Hasan and Mustafizur Rahman, who will be at the IPL -- will be expected to join the camp in Oman.

The Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) is planning to organise a practice match against a local team in addition to the two official practice matches scheduled by the International Cricket Council.

BCB CEO Nizamuddin Chowdhury explained the reasons behind the long break ahead of the world cup.

"We decided to not camp in the country in order to combat the players' physical exhaustion and mental fatigue. They have played a lot of games recently, that too in bio-bubbles and isolation. Besides, after the World Cup, a hectic schedule lies in wait as we will host Pakistan and then tour New Zealand and South Africa. Domestic cricket and the BPL season are likely to be hosted in between," Nizamuddin told The Daily Star.

Bangladesh, placed in Group B alongside Papua New Guinea, Scotland and Oman in Round 1 of the T20 World Cup, will kick-off their World Cup campaign against Scotland on October 17. The Tigers will have to secure the runners-up spot at the least to qualify for the Super12 stage, scheduled to begin on October 23.

Women's team eye improvement against Nepal

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh women's football team will take on Nepal in the second FIFA friendly fixture at the Dashrath Stadium in Kathmandu at 5:15pm (Bangladesh time) today.

Having lost the first match 2-1, the women in red and green are looking to improve their performance against their South Asian counterparts, whom they have never been able to beat, with an eye on the upcoming AFC Women's Asian Cup Qualifiers.

The performance in the first match, where Bangladesh conceded two early goals before substitute Tohura Khatun pulled one back, wasn't all that bad considering the Bangladesh team were playing their first match in two-and-a-half years.

"We were playing after two-and-a-half years and could identify what mistakes we made and where we stand right now. We are looking forward to perform better in the second match and get some boost ahead of the Asian Cup Qualifiers in Uzbekistan later this month," midfielder Mishrat Jahan Mousumi said in a video message from Kathmandu.

12 years and 118 days had passed since Cristiano Ronaldo last played in a Manchester United shirt, but the 36-year-old did not miss a beat as he found the back of the net twice on his first start since returning to Old Trafford against Newcastle in a Premier League encounter yesterday. Bruno Fernandes and Jesse Lingard put the gloss on the finish with two further strikes, giving the hosts a 4-1 win.

Djokovic's last hurdle en route to summit

One match from finishing the first calendar-year men's singles Grand Slam in 52 years, Novak Djokovic isn't getting ahead of himself by talking about it.

Djokovic defeated Tokyo Olympic champion Alexander Zverev 4-6, 6-2, 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 on Friday to reach the US Open final, where he will face Russian second seed Daniil Medvedev with tennis history at stake.

"I know everybody wants to talk about history," Djokovic said. "I'm just trying to lock into what I know works for me."

World number one Djokovic will try to complete the first calendar Slam since Rod Laver in 1969 and only the fourth ever after Laver in 1962 and Don Budge in 1938. Australian legend Laver, 83, was in the stands to watch Djokovic continue his quest for history.

But the task remains unfinished, so talking seems premature to Djokovic.
