

‘Democracy will die’

Politicians, civil society join journalists in protest against proposed draconian media authority

Dawn/ANN

Supports from political parties, student unions and members of civil society have continued to pour in for Pakistani journalists who are protesting against the proposed Pakistan Media Development Authority (PMDA) bill.

The protesting journalists have been protesting since Sunday outside the parliament.

On Sunday night, senior opposition leaders including former prime minister Shahid Khaqan Abbasi visited the protest site outside the parliament to express solidarity with the journalists.

Addressing the protesterson Monday, PML-N leader Ahsan Iqbal lambasted the Pakistan Tehreek-i-Insaf government for “attacking and attempting to muzzle” the media.

Referring to the PMDA bill, he dubbed it a “conspiracy” and said if the bill was passed, “democracy will die in this country”.

Later, PPP Chairperson Bilawal Bhutto-Zardari addressed the protest, saying that journalists in the country had bravely fought against and defeated former president Pervez Musharraf in the past, and they would also put up a fight against the incumbent government and its decisions challenging media freedom.

He announced that the PPP would join journalist protests across the country.

PML-N President Shehbaz Sharif too railed against the bill, terming it a “black law” and expressing solidarity with journalists.

“The government doesn’t have the guts to pass it and we won’t allow it,” he thundered. Shehbaz warned the government against passing the “black law” otherwise it would have to bear the consequences.

Inside the parliament, Pakistan opposition members staged a vigorous protest against the PMDA bill during President Alvi’s address. Carrying banners such as “We reject media martial law” and “Opposition rejects PMDA”, they shouted slogans against the government and PM Imran Khan.

Taliban thank world for promised aid

AFP, Kabul

The Taliban yesterday thanked the world for pledging hundreds of millions of dollars in emergency aid to Afghanistan, and urged the United States to show “heart” in future dealings.

Amir Khan Muttaqi, the regime’s acting foreign minister, told a press conference the Taliban would spend donor money wisely and use it to alleviate poverty.

He was speaking a day after the United Nations said a total of $1.2 billion in aid had been pledged to Afghanistan, which was taken over by the Taliban on August 15.

He also asked Washington to show appreciation for the Taliban allowing the US to complete evacuation 120,000 people last month.

“America is a big country, they need to have a big heart,” he said.

Suu Kyi back in court after health no-show

AFP, Yangon

Ousted Myanmar leader Aung San Suu Kyi returned to court yesterday to face charges of incitement and flouting Covid restrictions, her lawyer said, a day after failing to appear on health grounds.

Suu Kyi’s government was deposed by the military in a February coup that sparked a mass uprising and a brutal junta crackdown on dissent that killed more than 1,000 civilians.

Monday’s hearing was adjourned after Suu Kyi suffered from what her lawyer said was “car sickness”.

Journalists are barred from the proceedings against Suu Kyi, who also faces charges of sedition, accepting illegal payments of gold and violating a colonial-era secrecy law.

Myanmar’s junta chief said last month that elections would be held and a state of emergency lifted by August 2023, extending the initial one-year timeline the military announced days after the coup.

TALIBAN TAKEOVER OF AFGHANISTAN

Can the Middle East trust US?

Official says Gulf states are reconsidering their alliances

THE GUARDIAN

The Taliban’s takeover of Afghanistan is a shattering earthquake that will shape the Middle East for many years, a senior Gulf official has said, warning that – despite the group’s promises of moderation – the militant group is “essentially the same” as last time it was in power.

Speaking on the condition of anonymity, the official also said that the rapid and chaotic US withdrawal also raises serious questions for Gulf states about the value of US promises of security over the next 20 years.

“Afghanistan is an earthquake, a shattering, shattering earthquake, and this is going to stay with us for a very, very long time,” the official said on Monday. He added that the episode marked a complete break with the outdated Carter doctrine – a commitment that an oil-dependent US would use military force to defend its interests in the Gulf.

“Can we really depend on an American security umbrella for the next 20 years? I think this is very problematic right now – really very problematic.”

He suggested that 20 years of warfare, supposed to be “a battle against those who had hijacked Islam”, had left no legacy in Afghanistan, and predicted that the Taliban’s seizure of power would prompt concern among leaders in West Africa and the Sahel about the rise of a newly confident Islamic extremism.

The official added he had no expectation that the Taliban would behave differently from when it was previously in power, saying, “They are essentially the same, but just more world-savvy.”

Afghanistan, he said, will probably come to be seen as a Pakistan victory, and a Chinese opportunity – with the US playing a minimal role. “If there is a geopolitical struggle over Afghanistan, we will see Pakistan and China on one hand and India, Iran and Russia on the other hand,” the official said. “And I don’t think the Americans are going to be a part of the geopolitical struggle over Afghanistan.”

Many Gulf states have already begun recalibrating their foreign policy to take into account declining US dependence on oil and the growing popular insularity of the US, but the official said he now expected that process to speed up, leading to realignments in alliances and a desire for some historical rivals to establish more pragmatic relations. The general aim will be to de-escalate tensions in the region, the official said.

The official added that he expected to see greater discussions between Saudi Arabia and Iran in the future, as well as between the United Arab Emirates and Iran. The official also pointed to the signing of a defence agreement between Saudi Arabia and Russia as a sign that in a post-carbon age, the Gulf states wanted to diversify their sources of security away from the US.
