Analysts ask govt to closely monitor developments before deciding to recognise Taliban govt

PORIMOL PALMA

Scepticism grows among policymakers and foreign relations analysts over Bangladesh-Afghan relationship under the Taliban, which have formed an interim government with the hardliners despite their promise of an inclusive cabinet.

The formation of the new government in Kabul has dealt a blow to the expectations that this Taliban might be moderate, have learned lesson from the past and now want a good rapport with the international community.

Analysts think Bangladesh needs to wait and watch closely the developments in the coming days before deciding to recognise the Taliban government.

Afghanistan's interim government is made up of hard-line Taliban and Haqqani Network members. The network, which is designated as a terrorist organisation by the US, is responsible for deadly attacks and kidnappings in Afghanistan over the past two decades.

Mullah Mohammad Hasan Akhund, who is on a UN sanctions list, is acting prime minister and Taliban co-founder Abdul Ghani Baradar is his deputy. Sirajuddin Haqqani, son of the founder of Haqqani Network, is interior minister and is one of FBI's most wanted men due to his involvement in suicide attacks and ties with al-Qaeda.

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A man who used to earn Tk 130 per day as a computer operator at Cox's Bazar's Teknaf Land Port in 2001 has amassed crores of taka illegally, Rab said after his arrest yesterday.

While working at the port, the arrestee -- Nurul Islam, 41 -- mastered the techniques of smuggling, evading tax, unloading illegal goods, and tampering documents, Rapid Action Battalion said.

He then formed a racket of brokers and amassed crores of taka over the last two decades, Khandaker Al Moin, Rab's legal and media wing director, said after members of the elite force -- along with an intelligence agency -- arrested him from Dhaka's Mohammadpur early yesterday.

Rab said they seized fake Bangladeshi currency worth 3.46 lakh, Myanmar currency worth 3.80 lakh, Tk 2.01 lakh in cash, and 4,400 pieces of yaba during the

MALRAUX WANTS TO TAKE OVER A MILITARY COMMAND
Andre Malraux, the famous French litterateur and politician, wanted to join the Bangladesh Liberation War and take over a military command. He expressed the desire in a letter to an Indian diplomat friend. He asked that Bengal be a country of resistance. He said, "Bengal is not necessarily a country of non-violent resistance. It can be and must be a country of resistance only... The only intellectuals who can speak seriously in the name of Bengal are those who will fight for Bengal." Referring to his military experience, Malraux said, "I am ready to take a military command in Bengal."

Gold mask among 3,000-yr-old relics unearthed in China

CNN ONLINE

A gold mask dating back over 3,000 years is among hundreds of relics uncovered from a series of sacrificial pits in southwest China, according to the Sichuan Provincial Cultural Heritage Administration.

The finds were made at Sanxingdui, a 4.6-square-mile archeological site outside Chengdu that has yielded thousands of ancient artifacts since a local farmer stumbled across it in the 1920s.

The golden mask, which was discovered in June but first unveiled earlier this month, weighs about 100 grams (0.22 pounds) and would have been part of a larger bronze head rather than a

PEGASUS SPYWARE Apple issues iPhone software update

CNN ONLINE

Apple has updated its software for iPhones to address a critical vulnerability that independent researchers say has been exploited by notorious surveillance software to spy on a Saudi activist.

Researchers from the University of Toronto's Citizen Lab said the software exploit has been in use since February and has been used to deploy Pegasus, the spyware made by Israeli firm NSO Group that has allegedly been used to surveil journalists and human rights advocates in multiple countries.

The urgent update that Apple (AAPL) released Monday plugs a hole in the iMessage software that allowed hackers to infiltrate a user's phone without the user clicking on any links, according to Citizen Lab. The Saudi activist chose

Big drop in antibodies

Finds Indian study on fully vaccinated health workers within four months of first Covid shot

AGENCIES

A study of 614 fully vaccinated health workers in India found a "significant" drop in their Covid-fighting antibodies within four months of the first shot.

The findings could help the Indian government decide whether to provide booster doses as some Western countries have done.

Waning antibodies do not necessarily mean that immunised people lose their ability to counter the disease, as the body's memory cells may still kick in to offer substantial protection, said the director of a state-run institute that did the study.

"After six months, we should be able to tell you more clearly whether and when a booster would be needed," Sanghamitra Pati of the Regional Medical Research Centre, based in the eastern city of Bhubaneswar, told Reuters yesterday.

"And we would urge similar studies in different areas for pan-India data."

British researchers said last month that protection offered by two doses of the Pfizer/BioNTech and the AstraZeneca vaccines begins to fade within six months.

The Indian study, published in the Research Square pre-print platform but yet to be peer reviewed, is one of the first such done in the country involving its main two vaccines - Covishield, a licensed version of the AstraZeneca shot, and domestically developed Covaxin.

Health officials say though they are studying the
