TRANSPORT SECTOR AUTHORITIES

Each tragedy exposes their incompetence

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

Whenever a tragic incident hits the transport sector claiming people's lives, a dismal picture of irregularities, mismanagement, and incompetence of the authorities gets exposed.

Be it a fire incident, a launch or ferry capsizes, or a road or train accident, each of them becomes a topic of public discussion. The regulatory bodies seem to come to its senses, taking no time in forming probe committees.

The committees, indeed, unearth some irregularities and mismanagement and make recommendations, but those are left to be forgotten until a major incident occurs again.

Interestingly though, after most of the incidents, cases are filed against errant drivers or owners and, sometimes, lower-tier staffers of government agencies face music.

Top government officials, however, are never held responsible for their failures in preventing the incidents, which, according to experts, demonstrate the poor state of governance in the sector.

"The setup of the regulatory bodies is not functioning effectively. Their presence remains only on paper," noted transport expert Prof Moazzem Hossain told The Daily Star yesterday.

"Every time after a major accident, we come to know that the procedures were continuing in an uncontrolled manner. It happens mainly due to a lack of accountability," he said, adding, "If you want to change the situation, the authorities must be made accountable."

FAILURE EXPOSED AGAIN
Violation of rules and the authorities' failure to check it came to the fore once again after fire ravaged a launch early Friday killing at least 41 people and injuring more than 100 others.
