Customising your first signet ring

Engravings come in one dimensional styles and three dimensional styles which tend to be pricier.

Crafting the top

Choosing the material for the top is the second step. While some people go for flattened gemstones such as black onyx or bloodstone, others choose a metal top to carve the symbol onto. Metal options include sterling silver, gold, rose gold and white gold. Shapes which the metal or gemstone top are commonly cut into include the cushion top, the modern looking octagon, the elegant rounded cut, and the vintage long oval.

Banding it together

Metal options for the band of the signet ring include sterling silver, rose gold, gold, and white gold. If you would like further personalisation, you can always add engravings on the inner side of the band, with a phrase or word you hold close.

Getting your hands on it

Traditionally, signet rings would be worn on the pinkie finger of the non-dominant hand. This eased the document signing process. As signet rings are no longer used in place of fingerprints, it is totally up to you to choose the finger which will bear your bespoke ring.
