People wait in line to cast votes as a member of a technical team plugs in an EVM inside a booth of a polling centre in Siddhirganj around 10:00am yesterday. This electronic voting machine was brought after the previous one went out of order. Glitches and people's inexperience with EVMs slowed down voting at different centres during the NCC polls.

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

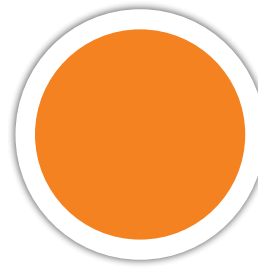

People's lack of experience with Electronic Voting Machines and the mismatching of fingerprints slowed down voting in several polling centres yesterday during the much-talked-about Narayanganj city corporation election.

Many voters had to try several times to cast their votes after washing their hands, wiping their fingers or using

"I'll win the polls if there is no violence on the voting day."
