

Separated from mothers, baby elephants are tied to logs and pulled around the field like this. As they writhe in agony, their trainers completely ignore their cry for help, saying, "This is how it's always been."

Torture, abuse, separation

The story of how elephants are domesticated

MINTU DESHWARA

People of greater Sylhet and Chittagong Hill Tracts regions are familiar with domesticated elephants being used to pull trees down the hills, in circuses and at various social events.

But behind these seemingly innocuous actions lies a history of torture and abuse, as the elephants are cruelly trained into submission from a very young age.

Experts condemn this method of training and are calling for its end, but the forest department does not seem to have any plan regarding the issue.

According to the Department of Wildlife Management and Nature Conservation, there are 45 domesticated elephants in Sylhet division, who are trained across four to five spots. Locally, this training is known as "Hadani".

Locals said it begins by tying up baby elephants, away from their mothers. They are then subjected to various brutal methods of training, as well as physical abuse.

This correspondent spoke to Joynal

They also have emotions. They writhe in frustration when we tie them up. We also need to beat them up often, which is why we keep the mothers away. If they're around, they might get enraged and start attacking people.

AKBAR ALI
Trainer

Mia, an elephant trainer based in Kuchaitol area in Moulvibazar's Juri upazila.

"We have a seven-member training team, led by myself and head coach Akbar Ali. After separating the babies from the mother elephants, we tie them up with a rope from all sides," he elaborated the process.

"We then tie them to wooden logs buried in the ground. We keep them like this for two hours, feeding them sweets mixed with straw. We then pull the logs up and drag the elephants around the field," he said, rather nonchalantly.

"This method has been used since the time of our forefathers. Without this, the wild elephants cannot be tamed," he added.

Trainer Akbar Ali used to be a "mahout". He joined as a trainer around 20-25 years ago. "We have trained them since childhood, otherwise taming them becomes impossible later on," he told this correspondent.

"They also have emotions. They writhe in frustration when we tie them up. We also need to beat them up often, which is why we keep the mothers away. If they're around, they might get enraged and start attacking people," he said quite nonchalantly.

This training lasts for two months, after which circus acts and tree pulling is taught, Akbar said.

Asked about the brutality of the method, Akbar said they have an ointment made from tree leaves, which is applied to the elephants when they're wounded.

Locals told this correspondent that forest department officials sometimes come to inspect the training grounds. During these visits, the cruelty is kept to a minimum. But it restarts once the inspection is over.

Contacted, Rezaul Karim Chowdhury, divisional forest officer, said the others have licenses, which allows them to train the elephants. But he said this should not abet their torture during training.

"They should be more aware of this," he said, adding that there are gentler methods of training even in neighbouring Sri Lanka and Thailand.

He also assured of taking steps in this regard. Wildlife expert Prof Monirul H Khan of Jahangirnagar University's zoology department said this is how elephants have been trained for ages, but it's out of date now. "There are policies on elephant training in other countries, but nothing like that exists here. It's quite ridiculous, to be honest," he said.

Liberation War affairs minister tells JS

Registration of 228 NGOs has been scrapped between 2017 and 2021 due to various reasons, including violation of conditions, Liberation War Affairs Minister AKM Mozammel Haque informed parliament yesterday.

Replying to a query from Jatiya Party MP Moshir Rahman Ranga, Mozammel, also in charge of the Prime Minister's Office in parliamentary affairs, said at present, there are 260 foreign NGOs and 2,266 local NGOs registered under the Bureau of NGO Affairs.

In a scripted reply, the minister said, according to section 14 of the Foreign Grants (Voluntary Activities) Regulation Act, 2016, if any person working in an NGO violates the provisions of these laws and makes hateful and indecent remarks about the constitution and constitutional institutions, acts against the state, funding, sponsoring or supporting militancy or terrorism or involvement in trafficking of women and children and arms and drug dealing, legal action can be taken against the organisations.

He said the project name, duration, date of approval, project and area related information, allocation, actual expenditure and number of beneficiaries are verified by the NGO bureau.

The minister said, "According to the Foreign Grants Regulation Act, 2016, the Bureau of NGO Affairs also monitors voluntary activities conducted by individuals and NGOs and can form a monitoring committee. If necessary, the bureau can also appoint an external observer."

PUST dept chair 'assaulted', barred from hiring board

Claims VC behind this; VC says teacher's wife was candidate

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Pabna

A department chairman of Pabna University of Science and Technology (PUST) was allegedly assaulted, as he was trying to enter a teacher recruitment board of his own department yesterday morning.

A member of the board himself, assaulted Prof Harunur Rashid is also chairperson of the university's mathematics department.

During a press conference held at Pabna Press Club yesterday afternoon, Prof Harun raised fingers against the university's vice chancellor Prof M Rostom Ali in this regard.

However, the VC said Harun was asked not to attend the board, as his wife is one of the candidates for the teacher's post.

"The registrar's office issued a notice for me on January 16 to join the board, formed to recruit two teachers for my department," Harun said.

"As I was trying to enter, officials stopped me as per the VC's instructions," he alleged. "At one stage, some junior level officials proceeded to assault me."

"I was assaulted and forced out of the board, so that the VC can select candidates of his choice," he said.

"External teachers from the VC's own campus [Rajshahi University] conducted the recruitment test. No teacher from PUST's mathematics department was there for the written exam or viva-voce," he added.

Harun also claimed that candidates most fit for the job were rejected, so that the VC can recruit his preferred candidates.

He then demanded suspension of the recruitment board and rescheduling the exam.

Talking to The Daily Star, VC Rostom Ali denied all allegations, saying there was no irregularity in the recruitment process.

However, he also said, "Dr Harun's wife is one of the candidates, so he was repeatedly requested to
