

Per capita income fails to buy 1-litre soybean oil bottle

Meanwhile, people are shooting angry and murderous looks at anyone walking along the street with a bottle of 5-litre soybean oil.

MAHUB ALAM MUNNA

"How many bottles of soybean oil could Elon Musk buy with all of his money?" a man wondered after failing to buy one litre soybean oil with his limited money despite having been blessed with a spiffy figure of per capita income.

People in Chapasthan are still racking their brains to try and figure out why they cannot buy their daily commodities despite having a healthy per capita income.

"Yesterday, I went to a grocery shop with a newspaper cutting where our new per capita income was magnificently highlighted. Then I gave it to the shopkeeper and asked him to give me a one litre bottle of soybean oil. He didn't give me anything and was furiously asking for money. Doesn't per capita income mean that I earn that money? So, why didn't he give me oil with my money?" another man said of his soybean oil-deprived existence.

Meanwhile, people are shooting angry and murderous looks at anyone walking along the street with a bottle of 5-litre soybean oil. Some have demanded immediate investigation to find the person's source of income and to conduct raids of their house without any prior notice.

Satireday talked to such a person. "What location will the police raid? I sold my flat to buy 5 litres of soybean oil," the man said, revealing the source of his riches.

It will be an absolute injustice if we only blame soybean oil. The price of every daily essential has increased and is increasing everyday by leaps and bounds.

Let us not forget that increment also means "development".

So, we can actually say Chapasthan is witnessing its quickest development. With the progress of this development project, people were seen running behind a truck instead of going to a grocery shop.

One of the emperors of Chapasthan agreed to explain people's mysterious chase of trucks on the condition of anonymity.

He said, "Look, despite being one of the most populated countries in the world, we have never won a medal in the Olympics. So, we planned to train our people by making them 'run' for everything. We are actually testing whether we can send them to the next Olympics."

The relationship between the war in Europe and the rise in price level of even homegrown products in Chapasthan has become another mystery.

A few months ago, people learned to cook without onions and currently they are learning to cook without oil. Experts believe the continuity of this learning process will eventually teach people how to cook without using anything. Leaders have said this could be great for a developing country.

"I stopped eating. Eating is so annoying that it requires going to a shop, complaining about the price, returning with an empty pocket, cooking and then complaining again about the taste of the food. So, it doesn't bother me whether the price of the products increases or not," a man from Apelpur Railway Station said.

I am also a psychologist, says B, CB boss

The chief of Board, Cricket Board (B, CB) Kamrul Hasan Phapa has said that along with being extremely knowledgeable about cricket, having outlandish business and organisational wisdom, he is also an expert psychologist.

This development came after he diagnosed and prognosed the mental condition of a star cricketer, who is very lucky to draw a salary at the end of the month despite not playing.

"I talked to him, and he talked to me. When the latter was happening,

"I talked to him, and he talked to me. When the latter was happening, I diagnosed that what he has is a case of IPL-itis."

I diagnosed that what he has is a case of IPL-itis. It is a little-known problem that no one else in the world can diagnose.

"I have also decided that he will completely recover by May 1, so I have given him leave till then," Phapa told Satireday.

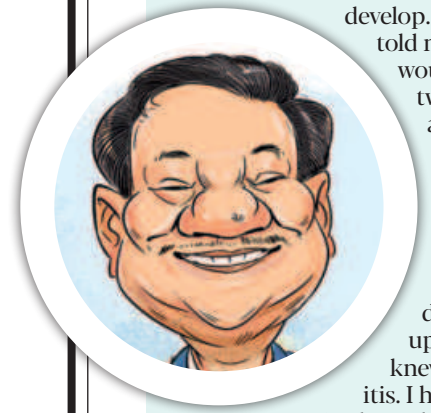

Asked how he arrived at the diagnosis, Phapa gave a glimpse into the inner workings of his brilliant mind.

"I also know exactly how long it takes for mental problems to develop. This cricketer told me that he would go on tour two weeks ago, and then before the team was supposed to leave, he said he is mentally unprepared. Mental problems don't just show up. That's how I knew it was IPL-itis. I have experience in these things. I have spent a long time working with and consuming pharmaceutical products."

When reminded that cricketers like England's Marcus Trescothick and Jonathan Trott had suddenly left tours of India and Australia because of mental struggles, Phapa said, "Oh, that's different. Those were English diseases. It doesn't happen in this country. Trust me, I am a psychologist."

Journos wanted for lightbulb reporting

ADNAN AKIB

Akash Bhora Tara is searching for a "promising reporter" to cover their "ultimate development beat".

According to a circular that the titanic newspaper published in another newspaper yesterday, the applicants must be willing to move a mountain for a tiny penny at the end of every month.

For its "ultimate development beat", Akash Bhora Tara would especially focus on every light installed on each lamp post on all gigantic bridges.

This beat has been created to please the ultimate pro max development gods of the country. So, the "promising reporters" have a bright future in this field.

Besides, the applicants must have good knowledge about such lights, lamp posts, and every other small to smaller materials on the bridges.

Otherwise, the organisation would arrange training sessions for the "promising reporters" by its already-employed "even more promising reporters".

If selected, the applicants must produce lead content related to the ultimate tubelight development that would perform amazingly on all its platforms. In short, a jack of all trades is preferred.

Please join Akash Bhora Tara if you wish to live in an "almost popped bubble".

Ministry mandates 'pockets' in all female clothes from April 1

STARS HOLLOW CORRESPONDENT

On International Women's Day 2022, in a landmark initiative to ensure equality, the Ministry of Women and Kids' Affairs (MOWKA) mandated pockets to be sewn in all female dresses from April 1.

"All tailors have been advised to include large-sized pockets on the sides of all clothing. RMG factories, their middlemen, and even Walmart have been notified of this decision. We want to change things and "If we want to #breakthebias, then we must start here: Pockets have no gender, pockets belong to everyone!"

make it better for women worldwide," said the Assistant to the Regional Manager of MOWKA while speaking to journalists in an event organised for IWD 2022.

"It's 2022, and women still have to carry their wallets, phones, papers, and North-end coffee mugs all in the same hand, because the other hand is busy stopping fast cars from running them over while they are crossing the road! We can't stop fast cars, that's the roads and transports division's job, but we can sew in the pockets and make it easy," he also added.

The Assistant to the Regional Manager also said, "If we want to #breakthebias, then we must start here: Pockets have no gender, pockets belong to everyone!"
