propelled by the values that define modernity in the 21st century, believe in democracy, freedom of speech, freedom of faith as a fulcrum of plural societies, gender empowerment and abolition of poverty," he said. He said India's diplomacy is driven by peaceful resolution of problems, not creating conflict. "Our diplomats are not wolf warriors. They do not take pride in being a pack of wolves."

Amir Hossain, also member of Awami League's advisory council, remembered India's contribution in the Liberation War of Bangladesh.

"They gave us all out support during the Liberation War," he said.

Mosque water the only

then bought a filter but that did not work. Finally, we came to know about the mosque's tube-well and have been getting water from here for the last one year." Wasa's water is okay for bathing and other uses but not for drinking, said Morjina Begum, a resident of West Tejturibazar.

The deep tube-well opens for the public after Asr prayers and continues till 10:00pm daily, Mojibur Rahman, a staffer of West Tejturibazar Jame Mosque, told The Daily Star. "It costs over Tk 50,000 monthly to provide the water. The mosque authority bears the costs, and over thousands of people are benefiting."

This newspaper visited several houses and asked property owners about Wasa's water issue.

Several landlords said they have communicated with Wasa but were informed that a pipe leakage due to construction work might be behind the problem.

Wasa suggested property owners check their pipelines and clean the buildings' reserve water tank. However, the situation did not improve over the years, claimed locals.

Shamim Hasan, councillor of Dhaka North City Corporation's (DNCC) Ward 26, told The Daily Star that he knows people from far away go to the mosque for drinking water.

"I will talk to NGOs, so that a tube-well can be set up in the area," he added.

He, however, declined to comment about Wasa's water.

Contacted, Jayanta Saha, executive engineer of Wasa's Zone-3, told this newspaper, "We got some complaints recently about smelly water. It is actually due to chlorine present in the water. It is not harmful." The dry season might also be behind the issue, he said. "We are eagerly waiting for rainfall, and hopefully, the smell will stop after that."

Jayanta further said that he would send a team to West Tejturibazar to check the water, as the smell can also be due to pipeline leakage.

"I will then send the sample to the laboratory for tests to check the actual cause," he added.

What's with all

from nursing advice to buying and selling opportunities, Riche said. "The groups were launched out of love. But thousands with a similar fondness for plants joined us."

BPLS currently has more than 87,000 members on Facebook, while BCLS has over 72,000.

"There are some people who don't even live in the country, but we get all kinds of support from them. They've helped us bring in rare or locally unavailable varieties, and sometimes they've even given out plants to new gardeners for free."

This trend to encourage new gardeners seems to be a norm for the groups. Beyond migrant members, some experienced, "big-scale" local gardeners also help out the fresh and new in this way.

At yesterday's event, the organisers recognised 12 of them: 10 living in Bangladesh and two from abroad. They were awarded with crests that bore the moniker "Shera Bagani" (top gardener).

The event was executed with help from 10-15 volunteers, Riche said, including group admins and moderators, such as Asif Iqbal, who runs a plant-info page on Facebook named "Asif the Cacto Boy".

Around 300 people attended the event yesterday, from outside the capital as well. They brought with them numerous varieties of indoor, outdoor, seasonal and medicinal plants.

Riche said she started out with the groups as a member. But over time, she realised the demand for plants all across the country and began growing and selling some herself.

"As you can guess from my story, the groups are encouraging not only gardening, but also entrepreneurship among the youth."

"At this point, there are not just two Facebook groups. We consider ourselves family."
