DRIED FISH Govt earns Tk 4.18cr revenue from chars of Sundarbans

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

Some 6,500 tonnes of dried fish have been produced at several chars by the Bay of Bengal and Sundarbans, earning the government over Tk 4.18 crore in revenue.

Every year from November to March, about 15,000 fishermen go out to make their catch and live in temporary huts made out of polythene, wood and straw on chars including Dubla, Alorkol and Meherali.

They dry different species of fish out in the sun without using any chemicals, for which products of these chars have gained a reputation both within the country and abroad.

The forest department said though the revenue generated was around Tk 1 crore higher than that last season, it would have exceeded Tk 5 crore had not two storms struck at the beginning and end of the season.

Most of the fishermen have left for their families while some are still in the process of packing up and leaving.

Oil price rises to $108

Oil prices rose on Tuesday as the United States and Europe planned new sanctions to punish Russia over alleged war crimes in Ukraine, raising concerns of tighter global supply, while Iran's nuclear talks with world powers stalled.

Brent crude was up 90 cents, or 0.8 per cent, to $108.43 a barrel at 0801 GMT, and US West Texas Intermediate was up 78

What impact would a Russian debt default have?

REUTERS, London

Russia has managed to avoid defaulting on its international debt so far despite unprecedented Western sanctions. But the task is getting harder and Moscow's threats to cut Europe's gas supply seems to be upping the ante further.

Would a default really make any difference at this stage though, and what would it entail?

If Russia fails to make any of its upcoming bond payments within their pre-defined timeframes, or pays in roubles where dollars, euros or another currency is specified, it will constitute a default.

Such an event would have been unthinkable before the Feb. 24 invasion of Ukraine, which Moscow describes as a "special military operation", and subsequent sanctions that have frozen hundreds of billions of dollars worth of its reserves.

Russia is already locked out of the international borrowing markets due to the West's sanctions, but a default would mean it couldn't regain access until creditors are fully repaid and any legal cases stemming from the default are settled.

Defaults in other countries such as Argentina have seen aggressive creditors go after physical assets such as a navy vessel and the country's presidential aircraft. Russia's state-owned energy giants own some of Europe's key gas infrastructure so it would raise plenty of questions.

It could also create a host of headaches if countries or companies that would normally trade with Russia have selfimposed rules that prohibit transacting with an entity in default.

If sanctions are removed at some point in the future Russia's reputation in financial markets would still be tarnished. That would depress Russia's credit ratings and push up the borrowing rates paid by the Russian government and companies.

By continuing to make its debt payments this month, Russia so far has swerved its first default of any kind since a 1998 financial crisis, and its first on the international market debt since the 1917 Bolshevik revolution when the new government refused to recognise Tsar-era borrowings This week Moscow has upped the stakes to make before the end of the year.

by offering to make a $2 billion bond payment due next week - its biggest of the year - in roubles rather than the intended dollars

As long as Russia doesn't force anyone who doesn't want roubles to take them, it wouldn't usually count as a default, but it is walking a tightrope. That the main rating agencies have had to withdraw their Russia ratings, and therefore won't call a default whatever happens, complicates things.

Another $447 million international bond payment is due on Thursday, but even if Russia remains willing to pay complications are about to stack up.

Western sanctions ban transactions with Russia's finance ministry, central bank or national wealth fund, although the temporary general license 9A issued by the US Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) on March 2 makes an exception for the purposes of "the receipt of interest, dividend, or maturity payments in connection with debt or equity."

That license expires on May 25, however, after which Russia will have almost $2 billion
