Israel warns over Iran nuclear programme

AFP, Jerusalem

Prime Minister Naftali Bennett yesterday warned the head of the International Atomic Energy Agency that Israel was prepared to use its "right to self defense" to stop Iran's nuclear programme.

The comments came after IAEA chief Rafael Grossi met Bennett Friday morning during a whirlwind visit.

Bennett's warning is a reiteration of Israeli vows to do whatever it takes to stop Iran from obtaining a nuclear bomb. It comes with tensions rising over stalled efforts to revive a 2015 nuclear deal between Iran and world powers.

Crisis-hit Sri Lanka seeks UN help on food shortages

AGENCIES

Cash-strapped Sri Lanka is seeking urgent United Nations help to build a stockpile of essential foods, the prime minister's office said yesterday, after authorities warned of looming starvation.

Acute shortages of food, fuel and other essential goods, along with record inflation and rolling blackouts, have inflicted widespread misery in the island nation's unprecedented economic crisis.

Scarce supplies of petrol, diesel and fertiliser have made it difficult for farmers to grow crops, while the agricultural sector is still reeling from a disastrous organic policy that kneecapped yields last year.

The UN Food and Agriculture Organization is now planning a "food crisis response plan" to shore up reserves and will also offer more funds for urban agriculture, Prime Minister Ranil Wickremesinghe's office said in a statement.

Parliamentary speaker Mahinda Yapa Abeywardana warned in April that Sri Lanka was facing "very acute food shortages and starvation".

Around half of Sri Lanka's rice production was lost last year, and the latest cultivation season which started last month has been disrupted because of fertiliser shortages.

Most of Sri Lanka's fertiliser is imported, but last year President Gotabaya Rajapaksa announced a ban on foreign agrochemicals as the country's foreign reserves began running out.

The policy was billed as an effort to fashion Sri Lanka into the world's first 100 percent organic farming nation, but was abruptly halted after farmers left their fields fallow.

The head of the agricultural ministry was promptly sacked last December after

The Colombo Consumer Price Index rose 39.1 pc year-on-year last month, up from 29.8 percent in April, according to the statistics department.

warning that the scheme could lead to a famine by the end of this year.

Sri Lanka saw its highest inflation on record for the eighth consecutive month in May, official data showed Wednesday.

The Colombo Consumer Price Index (CCPI) rose 39.1 percent year-on-year last month, up from 29.8 percent in April, according to the statistics department.

Food inflation in Colombo came in at 57.4 percent, up from 46.6 percent in April.

Private economists say consumer prices are rising even faster than official records show, with one John Hopkins University analyst tracking March inflation at 133 percent – more than six times the official figure.

Sri Lanka's import-dependent economy has been hammered by a critical foreign currency shortage, leading to months of acute shortages of food, medicines and other essentials.

Faced with a huge cash crunch, the government on Tuesday raised taxes across the board by rolling back cuts ordered by President Gotabaya Rajapaksa in November 2019.

Weeks of protests outside the president's seaford office have demanded his resignation over government mismanagement of the crisis.

Sri Lanka has defaulted on its $51 billion foreign debt and is seeking international aid to revive its bankrupt economy, including from the International Monetary Fund.

The country of 22 million people, located off India's southern tip, is struggling to manage its worst economic crisis since independence in 1948.

It has a long history of rising foreign obligations, driven partly by incessant government deficits, and this has been worsened by a loss of tourism revenue in the pandemic and, this year, by surging fuel costs.

Invisible killer in our homes

Health experts say indoor air quality has a greater health impact as people stay indoors for most of the time a day.

The life expectancy loss due to air pollution is 2.91 years – 1.16 years cut short by outdoor air pollution while 1.53 years by indoor air pollution, says another study.

In Bangladesh, more than 75 percent households still use solid fuels for cooking, and indoor air pollution caused by this resulted in more than 94,800 deaths in 2019 alone, it found.

The study, "State of Global Air 2020: How Does Air Pollution Affect Life Expectancy around the World", was conducted by US-based organisations Health Effects Institute and Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation.

It also said 12 percent of infant deaths in Bangladesh are also linked to exposure to household air pollution.

'EXTREMELY DANGEROUS' Abdus Salam, a chemistry professor at Dhaka University, also a co-author of the "In-kitchen aerosol exposure" research team, said the study was aimed at getting a picture of indoor air quality.

"Indoor air pollution is a graver health concern than outdoor. The general perception is that indoor is safe but we found indoor air pollution dangerous for human health as our kitchens in urban settings are very small with a poor ventilation system," he told

The Daily Star.

The team found PM 2.5 level reaching up to 1,500 micrograms per cubic metre during the time of cooking and that is "extremely dangerous", he added.

Published in April, the report attributed small kitchens, extensive frying and long cooking duration as reasons for high PM 2.5 concentrations in Dhaka.

The 12 cities where the study was conducted are Dhaka, Chennai, Nanjing, Medellin, Sao Paulo, Cairo, Sulaymaniyah, Addis Ababa, Akure, Blantyre, Dar-es-Salaam and Nairobi.

In each city, five low-income homes were used for one-week continuous air quality monitoring of their kitchens.

According to the EPA, an independent executive agency of the US federal government, the indoor air pollution sources include fuel-burning combustion appliances, tobacco consumption, products for household cleaning and maintenance and central heating or cooling systems.

Some sources, such as building materials, furnishings and products like air fresheners, can release pollutants more or less continuously.

Other sources, related to activities like smoking, cleaning, redecorating or doing hobbies release pollutants intermittently.

Prof Salam suggested setting up a proper ventilation system in the kitchen. He also said mechanical ventilation like an exhaust fan can help mitigate harmful cooking emissions that mostly impact women and children.

Pallavi Pant, a senior scientist at Health Effects Institute in the US, told The Daily Star, "Long-term exposure to household air pollution is associated with an increased risk of ischemic heart disease, lung cancer, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, lower respiratory infections [such as pneumonia], stroke, type 2 diabetes, and adverse birth outcomes. Household air pollution is also associated with the development of cataracts."

In each city, five low-income homes were used for one-week continuous air quality monitoring of their kitchens.

Mohammad Abdul Motalib, deputy director of the Department of Environment, said they cannot say exactly what is the status of the country's indoor air quality as they don't monitor it.

"To make a comment, we need specific data which we don't have," Motalib said.

the officials said.

Besides, the Border Guard Bangladesh seized 50.79kg of gold from smugglers in 2021. But BGB has already seized over 55.49kg of gold this year.

A top official of the Criminal Investigation Department said only about one out of every 10 stashes gets caught.

Interestingly, since the gold policy was enacted in 2018, only 253kg was imported for business purposes through LC (letter of credit) as of February this year, said Abdur Rouf, immediate past director general of Customs Intelligence and Investigation Directorate (CIID), at a briefing on February 27.

Standing atop the boat-shaped stage, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina will face the gathering while colourful boats carrying the ruling party supporters ply the river.

The long-cherished bridge from Mawa to Janjira over the mighty river will directly connect the southwestern parts of the country with Dhaka and the northern and eastern regions.

AL decided to gather the participants from nearby districts and 21 southern districts.

People will visit on launches, trawlers and buses. AL central leaders are now visiting the southern districts and holding meetings with local party leaders to ensure the participation of 10 lakh people, the sources said.

The inaugural festival will be held under tight security and the entire area will be brought under CCTV coverage.

The Janjira rally will be followed by different daylong programmes including a cultural show in the evening with the participation of the country's popular cultural personalities. Before that, the PM is expected to inaugurate the Padma Bridge at the Mawa end at 9:00am in a programme organised by the government.

She will then attend a civic gathering comprising 2,500-3,000 people from all professional bodies, senior government officials, leaders from different political parties, civil society members and diplomats.

After the meeting, she will cross the bridge in an SUV, becoming the first citizen to use the bridge officially. On the opposite end of the bridge, at Janjira point, will await a foundation plaque to be inaugurated by the premier.

From there, she will join the mammoth rally.

Two murals of Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and Sheikh Hasina will be unveiled on both sides of the bridge.

The bridge, built at a cost of Tk 30,193 crore, is likely to be decorated with flags of Bangladesh and China because a Chinese contractor built the structure.
