Reshuffle in ACC to hurt high-profile probes

Say officials transferred en masse

MAHBUBUR RAHMAN KHAN

The recent reshuffle in the Anti-Corruption Commission would hamper investigation of many high-profile corruption cases, said officials who have been transferred.

In an order issued on June 1, the ACC transferred 39 assistant and deputy directors to different districts from its headquarters in Dhaka. They have also been asked to join their new workplaces by June 15; they will otherwise be released, the commission said.

Many of the 39 mid-rank officials are involved in probing high-profile graft cases and the investigations would now be delayed, the officials said, adding that they were transferred in the name of serving at a workplace for at least three years.

They alleged that the rule was not followed for officials who have come from admin and judicial cadres.

Although the commission pointed out that the transfer was nothing but a regular process, the officials alleged that the authorities made the decision as a punishment for forming an association.

An ACC deputy director, preferring to be unnamed, said after the sacking of deputy assistant director Sharif Uddin in February over "violating ACC rules", the officials became united in protests. They also formed Dudak Service Association the same month for their welfare.

"We're preparing for registration with the Department of Social Welfare and awaiting permission from high-ups in this regard. But instead of giving us permission, the authorities transferred the association members."

"All the 39 officials belong to the association," said the deputy director. In February, the association was formed with 139 members, including first-class and second-class officers, from the headquarters and districts.

At that time, officials said they were having a hard time keeping faith in the high-ups, who came on deputation from admin cadre and have been playing vital roles in decision-making at the commission.

"They have transferred us as a punishment for forming the association," the deputy director added.

Another official, wishing not to be named, said, "The commission's decision will hamper the ongoing probes of the high-profile corruption cases as the new officials will find it difficult to move forward with the investigations."

Contacted, ACC's Secretary Mahbub Hossain rejected the claim and said in a short text, "It's not right."

This correspondent tried to get his explanation over phone, but he did not pick up.

ACC Commissioner (Investigation) Jahurul Haque, however, said transfer was a regular process. "We've recently opened some new offices in some districts. We need experienced officers there."

He added that the transferred officials had been at the same workplace for over three years and they were getting involved in other activities. "They have become disappointed as their interests are hurt."

According to ACC website updated on April 10, 2019, out of 629 deputy, deputy assistant and assistant directors, 431 work in the ACC headquarters, from where major corruption cases, scrutiny, intelligence, hotline service and graft prevention activities are dealt with.

Hundi at play again

Talking to this newspaper, several economists said banks are losing fast the advantage they enjoyed at the height of the pandemic when the informal channels mostly remained closed. But as the Covid situation improved, remitters switched to informal channels again.

Prof Mustafizur Rahman, distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue, said exchange rate management is crucial in encouraging remitters to use the formal channels.

Pointing to the recent volatility in the forex market, he said there was a difference of Tk 6-7 between the kerb market rate and the official exchange rate of the dollar.

Such a gap should not be more than Tk 2-3, he said, adding that the persistence of a gap bigger than this raises concern over remitters opting for informal channels.

Yesterday, the central bank depreciated the exchange rate of the greenback to Tk 92 per dollar, the 12th depreciation this year, in an effort to stabilise the forex market.

Earlier on June 2, the BB decided to allow the exchange rates of the taka to float against the US dollar for the first time in a decade.

On the central bank move, Mustafizur said, "This will significantly reduce the tendency for remitters to switch to informal channels from the formal ones."

He, however, said the country is seeing a growth in inward remittance in the current fiscal year compared to the pre-Covid period (FY19-20), maintaining the "historical trend".

The BMET data shows Bangladesh saw annual growth in inward remittance for five consecutive years since 2017.

Mustafizur also said the recent outflow of a high number of fresh migrant workers is likely to boost inward remittance within a year, but there is a need for enhanced monitoring and a robust campaign highlighting the risk of sending remittance through informal channels.

With a robust campaign targeting fresh migrants, inward remittance in the next fiscal year could even touch $24.7 billion received in 2020-2021, he hoped.

According to government data, 7.99 lakh fresh migrant workers went to different countries in 10 months of this fiscal year.

Zahid Hussain, former lead economist at the World Bank's Dhaka office, said the increase in inward remittance in fiscal 2020-2021 was mainly due to the remitters switching to formal channels from informal ones amid the pandemic.

Besides, many returnee migrants brought all their savings home, boosting inward remittance, he noted.

As the Covid situation improved and activities in informal channels got back to normal, many switched back to the informal channels for sending money, he said.

Zahid further said "visa trade" is also another reason for which remittance is sent through unauthorised channels.

"There is a 'grey area' in such visa trade," he said, adding that host countries have to come forward to stop such malpractices since Bangladesh cannot stop it alone.

The economist suggested that the National Board of Revenue improve its intelligence capabilities to detect under-invoicing -- an act of showing the price of an item on an invoice lower than the actual one.

Through under-invoicing, many importers try to evade tax by making a part of payment through informal channels, he said.

Md Serajul Islam, executive director and spokesperson for Bangladesh Bank, said migrants sent their earnings through proper channels at the height of the pandemic as their mobility was restricted at that time. Besides, many migrants had to return home permanently.

He further said the government has been trying to fuel growth in inward remittance by giving cash incentives.

The cash incentive for remitting through the banking channel has been raised to 2.5 percent from 2 percent, Serajul pointed out.

The central bank has recommended a further increase in the incentive, he said without elaborating.

the country legally, then there is no need for a money laundering law in Bangladesh, he further said.

Govt to invite Khaleda, Yunus

Stages were being set at the Mawa end in this regard.

He said Hasina will inaugurate the bridge at 10:00am and then take part in a rally at the Mawa end. Other politicians, dignitaries and foreign diplomats will also be present there.

The PM will then cross the bridge and then take part in another rally at then Janjira end, Quader said.

At a June 4 programme, Quader verbally invited Mercy Tembon, World Bank's country director for Bangladesh and Bhutan, to the opening ceremony.

That day he told reporters that BNP

This amnesty should not be availed if there is any specific allegation of money laundering, he said.

Such an amnesty was given in India but that failed to bring any success, he added.

Gonoforum MP Mokabbir Khan demanded punishment of the top 12 corrupts in the country.

"By doing this, the government will be able to bring down 50 percent corruption in the country. If not, I will resign from the parliament," he said.

Pran Gopal Dutta, MP of the ruling Awami League, also asked the finance minister to revise the proposal.

"There is no positive impact of this amnesty. If the money launderers were honest, they would have kept the money in the country," he said.

Meanwhile, Khaleda Zia, on several occasions, raised questions about the government's capability and the quality of the bridge, while Hasina gave rebuttals for all of them.

Visiting the project areas yesterday, this correspondent saw workers were busy preparing for the rally at the Mawa end.

Workers were seen busy giving final touches for the grand opening. The 6.15km double decker bridge -- four lane highway on the top and single rail track at the bottom -- will directly connect the capital with southwestern regions of the country.

The decision deteriorated the relations between Bangladesh and the WB.

On several occasions, the PM accused Yunus of playing a role behind the cancellation of the WB loan.

HC questions legality of ACC rule

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday questioned the legality of a section of the ACC rules that curtailed individual's right to directly lodge corruption case with the court.

The court issued a rule asking the ACC and the government to explain in 10 days why section 13(3) of the Anti-Corruption Commission (Amendment) Rules 2019 should not be declared illegal and scrapped as the section allegedly damaged the individual's right to directly file corruption case with the court and curtailed the court's authority to directly accept such case for trial.
