Speakers tell event on communal attacks

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Attacks on religious minorities in the country are not isolated incidents, rather all of them are pre-planned. The authorities want to avoid responsibility by calling them isolated. The state must remain strict to put an end to such attacks. Speakers made the remarks in a roundtable on “Communalism and Social Responsibility” organised by Bangladesh Puja Ujjapan Parishad yesterday at Cirdap Auditorium in the capital. Prof Mizanur Rahman, former chair of National Human Rights Commission, said, “Unless and until the state acknowledges that these are not isolated incidents, there is no solution to this crisis.” “Resistance has to be formed against the communal fanatics,” said former Supreme Court Justice Shamsuddin Chowdhury Manik. Security analyst Maj Gen (retd) Mohammad Ali Shikder said, “States and nations that have allowed politics based on religion have been destroyed. We have to learn from that.” Professor Sadeka Halim of Dhaka University said, “After every attack, temples are built by the administration and financial support is provided to religious minorities. But the fear persists among them.” “Our society has changed. We cannot recognise this Bangladesh,” said Prof Robayet Ferdous of Dhaka University. Fauzia Moslem, president of Bangladesh Mahila Parishad, said, “Communal attacks are part of a bigger political conspiracy. We must collectively resist this.” Chandra Nath Podder, general secretary of Bangladesh Puja Ujjapan Parishad, said, “Those who are carrying out communal attacks aim to expel other religions from this country. They have managed to reduce the percentage of religious minorities from 18 percent to 9.7 percent. They have also managed to create an atmosphere of fear and terror.” Cultural personality Piyush Bandopadhyay, senior journalist Abed Khan, Samakal Advisory Editor Abu Saeed Khan, Prothom Alo Joint Editor Sohrab Hossain, General Secretary of Bangladesh Adivasi Forum Sanjib Drong and Puja Ujjapan Parishad President JI. Bhowmik spoke at the discussion among others.

In front of a school in Asad Gate area, parents along with their school-going children cross the road carelessly to get across quickly, while a speeding bus halts to let them pass. On top of this not being expected of parents, their reluctance to wait to let vehicles get across raises the chance of accidents on the busy road. This photo was taken yesterday.

Water in the gas line!

Over 1,000 Mir Hajirbagh residents at risk

MAHBUBUR RAHMAN KHAN

Households of the capital's Mir Hajirbagh have been facing a gas crisis for months. But that problem may seem trivial when compared to the looming danger. The residents are facing something bizarre. At night, gas pipelines of the households bring forth gas, as it should, and... water. According to an official of Titas Gas, the water comes out due to a leakage in the pipes. “If the leak is not repaired and gas gets trapped somewhere, there is a chance of an explosion.” This possibly means that over a thousand people are at risk of an accident. The department concerned of Titas says it is not possible for it to find leakages and suggested that locals inform the authorities if they sense leaking gas. According to Fire Service and Civil Defence, 1,511 fire incidents took place in the country between 2020 and 2021 because of gas-pipeline issues. Wealth worth about Tk 4.73 crore was damaged in these incidents. Thirty-eight people were killed in an explosion caused by gas-pipe leakage in a mosque in Narayanganj on September 4, 2020. Aside from this, a ritual is now part of the residents' daily life. They have to drain out the water from the pipes by opening the valves, otherwise they can't light

Most weekdays, gas supply stops at around 7:00am and comes back after 9:00pm. But there's another problem. We've to drain water out first to get the gas.

deputy general manager of Titas' Dhaka Metro Sales, to take measures to prevent accidents. For several years, locals have been facing a gas crisis, but recently, it has become severe, he said. “Although we've been paying bills equal to what households in posh areas pay, we don't get gas on time. Every day, gas pressure goes down after 7:00am and returns after 10:00pm,” he said. “Water comes out from risers and pipelines when the pressure increases. We don't get gas properly until the water drains completely,” he said, adding that at some houses, it takes about two to three days to get normal gas pressure. Due to this issue, gas is also being wasted, he added. A few days after the letter, a team from Titas visited the area, but no measures have been taken. Contacted, Monirul said he forwarded the letter to the emergency department and suggested that this correspondent contacts it. Shahibul Awal, manager of Titas' south emergency department, said an accident can take place if gas is trapped. “Usually, bubbles come out from the leaked parts. If locals see such bubbles or smell gas, they can call us, and we'll take measures,” he said. Locals also requested Titas
