Drive resumes after 3 months

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS) is going to resume its drives against unregistered hospitals, clinics and diagnostic centres from today after a three-month break.

The drive will continue till Thursday, Additional Director General (administration) of the health directorate Prof Dr Ahmedul Kabir told the reporters at a press conference at the DGHS headquarters in the capital yesterday.

The hospitals, clinics and diagnostic centers, which have already applied but are yet to get registered, will also not be allowed to run their operations, he said.

There are around 2,000 unregistered establishments in operation, he added.

Kabir said, "They lack or have no necessary documents to get registered. They cannot provide healthcare this way...."

Legal action will be taken against the doctors if anyone is found working for any unregistered institution, he said.

"Serving in any unauthorised hospital is illegal. We will not take responsibility if any registered physician serves in those hospitals," Kabir said.

Earlier, DGHS conducted a nationwide

'Nothing wrong with our rights situation' Law minister on UNHCR chief's comments

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Michelle Bachelet found nothing wrong with the human rights situation of Bangladesh, Law Minister Anisul Huq said yesterday.

"Michelle Bachelet visited different Rohingya camps, held meetings and talks with rights organisations and representatives from civil society during her visit to Bangladesh earlier this month," he said.

"She did not make any negative comments after seeing everything," said the minister after attending an event organised by Bangladesh Institute of International and Strategic Studies in Eskaton. "It is also evident from her comments that the government is running the country with democracy and equity."

Contacted, the law minister said the comments Bachelet made were surely positive as she did not find any violation of rights in the country.

Not a wise idea

Say experts on third country resettlement of Rohingyas

PORIMOL PALMA

The Rohingya genocide day on August 25 brought to the fore diverse suggestions for a sustainable solution to the Rohingya crisis. Two similar proposals, however, stand out. One was from US Secretary of State Antony Blinken and the other was from the Japanese Ambassador to Bangladesh, Ito Naoki.

In a statement, Blinken said in solidarity with Bangladesh and other Rohingya-hosting countries in the region, the US will increase the resettlement of Rohingyas.

“Third country resettlement is not a solution at all. This will make the Myanmar junta happy because they don't want the Rohingyas to return.”

Director of Centre for Genocide Studies at DU

"As an essential component of an international, comprehensive humanitarian response, we are working to significantly increase the resettlement of Rohingya refugees from the region, including from Bangladesh, so that they can rebuild their lives in the United States" -- were his exact words.

At an event, Ito Naoki said in parallel to repatriation, it is also vital to consider third-country resettlement that is one of the permanent solutions and a way to share the burden of the refugee crisis among the international community.

Since 2008, 54 families and 200 people, including the Rohingyas, were resettled in Japan, he said, adding, "I hope we can consider further possibilities of the Rohingya people's resettlement in Japan with the guidance of UNHCR."

However, international relations analysts say such public statements of third country resettlement without making any figures will not help the Rohingya repatriation, rather it will only work in favour of the Myanmar junta.

Experts said some 600,000 Rohingyas are facing genocidal acts. With news of resettlement possibilities being picked up by the media in the US and Japan, more Rohingya people are expected to flee Myanmar and seek shelter in Bangladesh and other countries.

"Third country resettlement is not a solution at all. This will make the Myanmar junta happy because they don't want the Rohingyas to return," said Prof Imtiaz Ahmed, director at the Centre for Genocide Studies under the Dhaka University's International Relations Department.

He said it was not clear why the two countries made a similar statement on third-country resettlement. Third-country resettlement is more appropriate if there is a war situation in a country, which is not the case for the Rohingya people.

"We need to be cautious of such a move. The previous records suggest that the US, Canada and some European countries gave shelter to only a few thousand of the Rohingya people, mostly from Malaysia and Thailand," said Prof Imtiaz.

"Even if we consider that the US and Japan accept a few thousand of the Rohingya people, it does not make much difference when there are 12 lakh Rohingya people currently living in Bangladesh," he added.

According to a state department report submitted to the Congress on Proposed Refugee Admissions for Fiscal Year 2022, more than 9,000 Rohingya have resettled to the US over the past decade, primarily from Malaysia.

According to Nay Say Lwin, co-founder of the Free Rohingya Coalition (FRC), Canada and Europe have resettled only about 2,500 Rohingyas.

"If the developed countries want to help the Rohingya people, they should provide scholarships for Rohingya youths to fund their higher education so that they can build their community," he told
