

‘Hawa’ has given me a new identity

NAZIFA TUSHI

I cannot judge my own performance and success. The audience, critics and most importantly, journalists like you, will be the ones who can make such comments.

Nazifa Tushi garnered much appreciation for her performance in “Hawa”. The next-gen star is currently busy promoting her film, which is running successfully in theatres.

The Daily Star caught up with Tushi to learn about her journey and future plans.

“Hawa” has completed a month in the theatres. Tell us your feeling about this achievement?

“Hawa” has managed to keep the audience’s interest for over a month, and that’s my biggest achievement as an artiste. The film is now being released in 117 theatres across the US and Canada, with show tickets for the first 10 days already sold out. Not just in Bangladesh, “Hawa” is gaining strong ground internationally.

This success has inspired many aspiring and prominent filmmakers to come up with their own unique scripts and storytelling styles. Even producers are now optimistic, and are looking to invest more in productions. I believe, if one is honest and hardworking, nothing can stop their success.

Considering the previous scenario in the film industry, I am happy that we were able to alter the course with our effort.

Would you say “Hawa” was a turning point in your career?

I don’t believe in such an idea. Only fate knows about the future and can assure my success. However, I won’t deny that “Hawa” has brought me immense fame, and I hope to keep walking down this road in the future.

You and your co-artistes have invested a lot of effort in promoting “Hawa”. This is not something we often come across in the industry.

One cannot make a film and watch it alone in a closed room. Cinema is for everyone.

Promotions are essential if one looks to inform the masses about their creations. For instance, how will someone know that you are a good cook, if they haven’t tasted your food—the case is the same for any creator. If the masses are not aware of your existence, then you can’t blame them for being unsupportive!

You must have many other projects in your hand at the moment. Could you tell us what we can expect from you in the future?

I am receiving a lot of offers, however, I will take some time to evaluate the scripts and roles being offered to me, before I jump on board. I had never expected that “Hawa” would receive such an enormous response. I just want to enjoy the success of this film for the time being, before I start something new.

The audience really enjoyed your performance in the film. How do you feel about their love for your character in the film?

I cannot judge my own performance and success. The audience, critics and most importantly, journalists like you, will be the ones who can make such comments.

Nevertheless, “Hawa” has given me a new identity, in my character Gulti, what more could an actor ask for?

As a woman, did you find yourself facing a lot more challenges when climbing the ladder in showbiz?

Of course, I did! However, women are more independent now and are reaching new heights in their careers, through their intelligence and effort. The main success mantra for me is—discard negative thoughts and your inferiority complex, and success will become your best friend.

than the month’s 30-year average and the lowest since 1981.

The average 30-year rainfall was 496mm.

June was less bad with average rainfall seeing a 3.6 percent drop and the average temperature being 0.6 degrees higher.

Experts said the whole world was experiencing temperature rise and it was due to global warming.

According to a World Bank report styled “Hotter and More Humid with Erratic Rainfall: Climate Change in Bangladesh”, the country has experienced an average rise in temperature of 0.5 degree Celsius between 1976 and 2019.

It also said changes in temperature depict a different pattern for Dhaka and Chattogram – maximum temperature in Dhaka increased by 0.5 degree Celsius whereas the increase for Chattogram was 0.9

degree Celsius between 1980 and 2019.

“Bangladesh is associated with having six seasons; however, with the effects of climate change becoming more pronounced, the distinguishing features of these seasons are becoming increasingly blurred,” the report said.

The report said mean (yearly average) temperatures across Bangladesh are projected to increase by 1.4 degrees Celsius around 2050 and 2.4 degrees Celsius by 2100.

This data correlated with a study that said major cities of Bangladesh have witnessed rising trends in day and night temperatures. It surmised that population density, lack of greenery, uneven building heights, and human activities were the main reasons behind the trend.

The study titled “Surface urban heat island intensity (SUHI) in five major cities of Bangladesh: patterns, drivers and trends” released last year found that Dhaka saw a rise in temperature of almost 3 degrees Celsius over the last 20 years.

AKM Saiful Islam, a professor at Buet’s Institute of Water and Flood Management, said since the industrial revolution, global temperature rose by 1.1 degrees, and various studies suggested that the urban temperature rose by two to three degrees.

“So, like the whole world, Bangladesh’s average temperature is also on the rise, especially in the urban settings. It is because of fossil fuel burning, water bodies in the urban areas vanishing, and high-rise buildings,” he said.

Ainun Nishat, emeritus professor of Brac University and water resources and climate change specialist, yesterday said, “Wind directions and rainfall pattern have become erratic. It is due to global warming.”

a critical geographic gap in the fossil record of the oldest dinosaurs and shows the power of hypothesis-driven fieldwork for testing predictions about the ancient past,” Dr Griffin said.

Based on fossil findings, researchers said Mbiresaurus may have stood on two legs and had a relatively small head like its dinosaur relatives.

They suspect it was an herbivore or potentially omnivore due to its small, errated, triangle-shaped teeth.

“Early dinosaurs like Mbiresaurus raathi show that the early evolution of dinosaurs is still being written with each new find and the rise of dinosaurs was far more complicated than previously predicted,” said Sterling Nesbitt, associate professor of geosciences and another author on the study.

The new discovery has also helped scientists develop a new theory of dinosaur migration.

“If the government servants commit any crime beyond official duties, they can be arrested without any permission from the government or appointing authorities,” he added.

Writ petitioners’ lawyer Manzil Murshid told The Daily Star that section 41(l) of the Government Service Act 2018 is now in force following the Appellate Division’s stay order.

The division will now examine the verdict and the law in question by hearing the government’s appeal, he added.

The government on Wednesday filed the petition with the Appellate Division seeking the stay order.

The apex court fixed October 23 for further hearing.

In a landmark verdict, the HC on August 25 scrapped Section 41(l) of the Government Service Act 2018 and also declared the provision contradictory to the fundamental rights and the constitution.

Delivering the verdict on a writ petition filed by Human Rights and Peace for Bangladesh, the HC observed that Section 41(l) has given protection to a particular section of people, contradicting articles 26, 27 and 31 of the constitution.

It observed that those who opposed the Padma Bridge construction were enemies of the state and they must be identified.

On February 15, 2017, another HC bench issued the suo motu rule asking the government to explain in two weeks as to why it should not be directed to form an enquiry commission to identify the “culprits who made up stories” and bring them to book.

The then HC bench of Justice Quazi Reza-Ul Hoque and Justice Mohammad Ullah had issued the rule following media reports that a Canadian court acquitted three people accused of corruption conspiracy involving the bridge.

The World Bank, which was supposed to be the main financier of the project, raised the allegation in 2011 and eventually pulled out of the scheme.

Later, Canadian police sued some top officials of SNC-Lavalin, a Canadian construction firm.
