

TK 2,000CR LAUNDERING CASE Key suspects get clean chit

Six Faridpur syndicate men excluded from charge sheet; court orders re-submission

SHARIFUL ISLAM

Led by former minister Khandaker Mosharraf Hossain's brother Khandaker Mohtesam Hossain Babar, now behind bars, they "pocketed big money" during the first two terms of the Awami League government.

Their roles in the syndicate came up prominently in separate confessional statements in a high-profile case over the laundering of Tk 2,000 crore since Mosharraf became a minister in 2008.

Yet six of them were excluded from the charge sheet as the Criminal Investigation Department, which investigated the case, did not find "sufficient evidence" to charge them.

CID officials said some accused in their confessional statements mentioned these names, but the investigators did not fall for it.

The charge sheet submitted in March last year caused quite a stir in the police department and also among the local politicians who had long known about the "aggressive" tender manipulation by this syndicate.

Local police and intelligence sources said these syndicate members exercised absolute power during their heyday to control who gets to bid for government tenders and how the proceeds are shared.

Two superintendents of police and an additional SP told The Daily Star that they suspect some of these syndicate members were let off the hook in exchange for money. All three officials had direct knowledge of the investigation.

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jhenidah

Shanta Khatun held her 45-day-old son tightly in her arms on the back of her father's motorcycle as they were taking their ailing child to the upazila health complex in Kaliganj, Jhenidah, yesterday morning.

Before they could reach, a pick-up rammed the bike from behind near Kaliganj bus stand. Shanta lost her grip on the baby, Sizan Hossain, as the three fell off the motorcycle.

Just then, the speeding pick-up ran over the child and sped off, leaving Sizan dead on the spot.

Shanta fell unconscious as she suffered severe head wounds. Sizan's grandfather Abul Kalam sustained minor injuries, witnesses said.

Locals rushed Shanta, Kalam and the dead infant to the health complex. Kalam received primary treatment, but his daughter was kept under observation as she had not regained consciousness till 7:00pm, when this report was filed.

BNP looks to turn up the heat on govt

Set to announce fresh programmes
as demos over price hike end today

MOHAMMAD AL-MASUM MOLLA

Considering the ongoing countrywide protest programmes a "success", the BNP now mulls over spreading the demonstrations to cities, divisional headquarters and districts to keep their presence on the streets.

The BNP has been organising demonstrations across the country since August 22 protesting the hike in prices of essentials and fuel. It's protests end today with a plan for organising fresh agitations to take the movement to the next level, party sources said.

As part of the plan, Dhaka North and South city units of BNP have drawn up programmes, including 16 public rallies, till September 27 to protest the increase in prices of essentials, transport fares, load shedding and the killings of Bhola Chhatra Dal leader Noore Alam and Narayanganj Swechhasebak Dal leader Abdur Rahim "by police".

Speaking to The Daily Star, BNP standing committee member Amir Khosru Mahmud Chowdhury yesterday said, "We are waging the movement for the people and to pursue their causes. They [people] are turning out in huge numbers in all our programmes, which is a big success of our movement. We are now planning to hold protests in the divisional headquarters."

He said people are taking to the streets defying attacks and arrests and it is the responsibility of the BNP and other "pro-democracy" political parties to raise their voice in favour of the people.

BNP leaders alleged that the party men were obstructed from joining demonstrations and they even came under attacks in many places across the country. In some places, they were even denied to hold demonstrations.

On July 31, a BNP man was killed in a clash between police and the party activists in Bhola town when they were holding demonstrations protesting power outages and "mismanagement" in the energy sector.

On August 3, Chhatra Dal leader Noore Alam died at a hospital in the capital of his injuries he sustained in the Bhola clash.

In Narayanganj, another BNP activist was killed in a clash with police on September 1.

Party sources said over 1,000 BNP leaders and activists were arrested and about 150 cases filed against them across the country last month. At least 52 protest Presidents, prime ministers, monarchs, leaders and ordinary people around the world have paid tribute to the life and service of Queen Elizabeth II, many of them reflecting on a 70-year reign that encompassed some of the most turbulent and decisive moments in modern British and world history.

As Thursday wore on and news of the Queen's ill-health eventually gave way to news of her death, global figures spoke of what she had meant to them.

Among the most frequently invoked words were "duty", "steadfast" and "constant", but mention was also made of her sense of humour, and of her life and role as a mother and grandmother as well as a monarch.

The US President, Joe Biden, and the first lady, Jill Biden, said, "Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II was more than a monarch. She defined an era."

In a world of constant change, she had been "a steady presence and a source of comfort and pride for generations of Britons, including many who have never known their country without her", they added.

Minutes after the Queen's death was announced, French President Emmanuel Macron posted a simple picture of the Queen on his Twitter account, unaccompanied by any words.
