

Police foil jobseekers' protest

ADC Harun scuffles with journalists, say witnesses

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police yesterday foiled a demonstration of jobseekers in the capital's Shahbagh and assaulted some protestors, who were demanding increasing the age limit to apply for civil service jobs, according to on-duty journalists and protestors.

At that time, Harun-or-Rashid, additional deputy commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police (Ramna), and two police officers scuffled with photojournalists, misbehaved and obstructed them from taking pictures.

Witnesses said more than 150 jobseekers demonstrated at Shahbagh intersection and halted vehicular movement around 4:30pm.

"At that time, police, led by ADC Harun, was pushing off the protestors from the street. They caught two protestors. When the journalists were taking pictures of the incident, the ADC obstructed the photojournalists from taking pictures, misbehaved and scuffled with some journalists," said a photojournalist of a national daily who was present at the spot.

Talking to this correspondent, ADC Harun claimed that he did not misbehave with any journalist.

"No one can provide any proof of the Additional deputy commissioner Harun-or-Rashid has reportedly developed a habit of turning a peaceful gathering into a bloodied one, and yesterday, his attempt at controlling a crowd of protesters at Shahbagh has been no different. Is beating his only duty?

Fingers pointed at senior cop in Ramna area

One senior cop in Dhaka has reportedly developed a habit of turning a peaceful gathering into a bloodied one, as witnessed in several events over a few months.

Apparently, he requires no need or excuse to get into a beating frenzy. He slaps fellow police officers, assaults students on the street, but interestingly enough, leaves Chhatra League men off his list of victims.

Harun-or-Rashid, additional deputy commissioner (ADC) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP), earned this dubious credential soon after his appointment in Ramna area.

"No attack was carried out on protestors while I was on duty. Whenever an unruly situation arises, efforts are made to deter it," Harun told this newspaper recently, before he beat up protestors yet again yesterday at the capital's Shahbagh.

However, video footage and photos of different media organisations as well as witnesses say otherwise.

On August 7, at least 12 demonstrators were injured at Shahbagh when a police team, led by Harun, pounced on protestors during a peaceful protest over fuel price hike.

Among the injured was Sami Abdullah, a Dhaka University student, who had to get 14 stitches on his head. A video of the incident showed protestors shouting slogans at Shahbagh intersection. All of a sudden, Harun instructed his colleagues to beat the demonstrators.

A cop was seen helping Harun put on a jacket and helmet. Within minutes, the ADC and his colleagues started beating the protestors with batons, leaving Sami and 11 others injured.

Teachers, staffers, students happy with Buet campus post-politics ban

The academic atmosphere, residential facilities, and food quality in hall dining areas have significantly improved following the ban on student politics on Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology (Buet) campus, said different stakeholders of the university.

Bullying and ragging culture in the dormitories have also seen a complete halt after the ban, according to students.

On October 11, 2019, Buet authorities banned student politics after Abrar Fahad, a second-year student of electrical and electronic engineering, was beaten to death by a group of Chhatra League (BCL) activists

It is obvious that many positive changes have taken place on the campus recently. Most importantly, there is harmony among the students now.

at the university's Sher-e-Bangla Hall between the night of October 6 and early hours of October 7.

At least 166 incidents of ragging were reported on a webpage named "UReporter" – operated by a section of computer science and engineering students – till October 10, 2019.

Not a single incident of assault, ragging or forcing to attend BCL's political programmes were reported in the page since the ban came into effect.

Seeking anonymity, a final-year student of the university told this newspaper that freshers used to be tortured regularly in guest rooms of the dormitories. Students of other batches were subjected to this torture as well if they dared to upset BCL seniors with their words or actions.

CHANGES AT A GLANCE

- ➔ No more reported cases of ragging, bullying
- ➔ Improved environment at dorms
- ➔ Better quality of food at canteens
- ➔ Canteen managers not harassed, extorted anymore
- ➔ Students no longer forced to join political programmes

Another student described how senior students who were active in BCL politics would pressurise freshers to attend BCL programmes.

"We were given no other option but to comply. Sometimes, we had to attend programmes after returning from classes at noon, even if we had a lab test in an hour. We couldn't even have lunch and prepare for exams."

However, both students and the administration are more conscious and stricter regarding ragging now.

"There is a peaceful environment in the halls now, with seniors being more friendly to us," said a fresher at Buet's Sher-e-Bangla Hall.

Before the ban, BCL leaders used to become mess managers using their political influence. In the process, they would misappropriate money, which would result in subpar quality of food, said several students and dining staffers.

They claimed that there was no accountability on the part of these managers.

No one dared to talk against them fearing repercussions from BCL activists.

Some hall staffers and canteen managers also mentioned that previously, they had to give a certain amount of their earnings to BCL activists and would be tortured if they refused to do so.

"We could not make any profit from the venture, which pushed us towards providing substandard food," they said.

A canteen manager, wishing anonymity, said BCL leaders and activists used to dine in the canteens without paying for the food.

"On one occasion, one of them snatched money from our accounts to buy cigarettes," he said.

"We went through unimaginable torture for this reason. Now, we are finally at peace," said another canteen staffer.

Some teachers of the university also claimed that after the ban on politics came into effect, the campus has seen a lot of progress, with significant improvement in the overall environment.

"Buet's academic and overall environment is way better now. The ban on politics is one of the major reasons," he said.

Contacted, Buet Vice Chancellor Satya Prasad Majumder said, "It is obvious that many positive changes have taken place on the campus recently. Most importantly, there is harmony among the students now."

A total of 364 students from different schools, colleges, universities and madrasas have died by suicide, revealed the study conducted by Aachol Foundation, a student-based social organisation.

A group of men marches in rhythm, carrying a heavy log across the road and towards the saw mill. These workers usually work in groups of eight to 12, depending on the size and weight of the log, and get paid Tk 900 for each tonne they carry. In this way, these workers carry 15 to 20 tonnes a day to earn a good enough amount for their families. This photo was taken in Kamrangirchar yesterday.
