Will Dhaka finally be free of faulty buses?

BRTA to conduct drives after Nov 30

TUHIN SHUBHRA ADHIKARY

The section 25 of Road Transport Act-2018 clearly states that operation of unfit and rundown vehicles is a punishable offence and one may face up to six-month jail or Tk 25,000 fine or both.

Besides, there are dedicated persons such as vehicle inspectors, at the offices of Bangladesh Road Transport Authority (BRTA), who are supposed to check all these aspects before giving fitness clearance to a particular vehicle.

But, even with the strict legal provision and monitoring mechanism in place, rundown buses ply the city streets, contributing to road crashes and pollution, under the very nose of the authorities.

Although the authorities on several occasions took steps to drive such vehicles off the city streets, they often failed in face of the opposition from transport associations.

BRTA once again decided to conduct drives against such vehicles.

The regulatory authority last week wrote letters to the transport associations for fixing problems of all faulty buses and minibuses within November 30, BRTA officials said.

Otherwise, the authority will conduct a mobile court drive against the vehicles after the deadline, they said.

BRTA has also published advertisements on different national dailies asking transport owners to fix their problem within November 30.

In the meantime, BRTA has directed all of its vehicle inspectors not to provide fitness clearance to any faulty vehicles. Otherwise, punitive actions would be taken against them too, the officials added.

WHY THE MOVE?

The move came after the Road Transport and Highway Division last week asked BRTA to take strict action against rundown buses.

House tutors not in the house

DU dorm students have no guardians to listen to their problems

SUHANUR RAHMAN SHUVO

The house tutors at the dormitories of Dhaka University are assigned to hear and solve problems of the residential students, as per the university ordinance.

However, finding them has become an ordeal for students as they are rarely available.

These tutors are responsible for the education and overall well-being of students. But they are hardly present at the dorms, while most of the students don't even know where to go when they are in trouble.

The 1973 DU ordinance directed the hall authorities "to supervise and control the residence, and discipline of the students of the university, to regulate their extra-curricular activities and to make arrangement for promoting their health."

However, it didn't specifically mention the responsibilities of house tutors.

But on March 27, the university authorities provided specific guidelines for house tutors, instructing them to be available at the dorm offices, to visit the floors (block) under them at least once in a week, and to hold at least one monthly views-exchange meeting with students.

The purpose of such meetings was to listen to students' problems and solve them.

There are around 150 house tutors in 13 male dormitories and 73 tutors in five female halls, according to the DU administration.

This correspondent asked at least 10 students of the Shahid ATM Jalor Alam block of the Shaheed Sergeant Zahurul Huq Hall about how many times their house tutor visited their blocks this year.

The respondents said the house tutor responsible for their floor, Rafat Alam Mishu, an assistant professor of the Bangla department, visited them only once since October last year.

"But it was not for hearing or solving our problems," said Imran Hossain, a master's student.

Contacted, Rafat Alam said though he could not visit his floor on a regular basis, he remains available at his office regularly. "My doors are always open to students," he said.

Interestingly, some students of the hall couldn't even tell the name of their house tutors.

Carry out activities in disciplined way Home minister tells BNP

UNB, Dhaka

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday urged BNP to carry out their political activities in a "disciplined way", making it clear that the government will not shy away from taking action if they resort to violence.

Asserting that carrying sticks to political programmes is clearly "against the law", the minister said, "We've seen BNP activists thronging rallies with sticks in their hands, following the directives of their leaders. We won't interfere if they are peaceful. But we'll surely take action if they become violent."

"I hope that the BNP will conduct their programmes in a disciplined way. We won't spare them, if they endanger people's lives and damage properties by blocking roads or resorting to vandalism," he added.

Asaduzzaman said these on the sidelines of the inauguration ceremony of the mini-marathon and annual sports competition arranged by the Public Security Division at the Secretariat on Saturday.

The minister urged the BNP leaders to be careful with the words that they speak.

The Kalyanpur Khal, which many know as "Pongu" khal, owing to its proximity to the National Institute of Traumatology and Orthopaedic Rehabilitation, is on the verge of extinction due to pollution. Along with mindless waste dumping, locals also built a makeshift bamboo bridge to get across, for which plastic waste gets stuck, obstructing the canal's water flow. This photo was taken in Agargaon yesterday.
