

CYCLONE SITRANG 23 fishermen return home after being rescued in Bay

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Twenty-three Bangladeshi fishermen, who were rescued by Indian Coast Guard after their trawler sank in the Bay during Cyclone Sitrang, have been handed over to their families.

Lt Commander Khandaker Munif Taqi, media officer of Bangladesh Coast Guard, said the handover took place on Thursday.

Due to bad weather caused by the cyclone on Monday, a technical glitch developed in the trawler's engine and at one stage, the trawler sank in the Bay of Bengal during the storm, the official said.

During that time, the 23 fishermen, holding drums and other objects, were floating in the sea.

A team of Indian Coast Guard while patrolling the area by an aircraft saw them and immediately provided them a life raft which helped the victims to stay afloat. The fishermen were rescued on Tuesday by an Indian Coast Guard ship.

With a 36-hour bus strike in force since yesterday morning, buses have been taken off Rangpur streets ahead of the BNP's rally in the divisional city today. People had to travel mostly by three-wheelers all day yesterday. The photo was taken in front of the Rangpur inter-district bus terminal.

One more dies from Covid

UNB, Dhaka

Bangladesh reported one more Covid-linked death and 102 cases in 24 hours till yesterday morning.

With this, the country's total fatalities rose to 29,418 and caseload to 2,034,968, says the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS).

The mortality rate remained unchanged at 1.45 percent. The recovery rate rose to 97.29 percent from Thursday's 97.27 percent.

In September, the country reported 40 Covid-linked deaths and 13,251 cases.

Bangladesh registered its highest daily caseload of 16,230 on July 28 last year and its highest number of fatalities of 264 on August 10 the same year.

Global warming palpable for 96 percent of humans

Say researchers after studying 1,021 cities over last 12 months

AFP, Paris

Whether they realised it or not, some 7.6 billion people — 96 percent of humanity — felt global warming's impact on temperatures over the last 12 months, researchers have said.

But some regions felt it far more sharply and frequently than others, according to a report based on peer-reviewed methods from Climate Central, a climate science think tank.

People in tropical regions and on small islands surrounded by heat-absorbing oceans were disproportionately impacted by human-induced temperature increases to which they barely contributed.

Among the 1,021 cities analysed between September 2021 and October 2022, the capitals of Samoa and Palau in the South Pacific have been experiencing the most discernible climate fingerprints, the researchers said in the report, released on Thursday.

Spiking temperatures in these locations were commonly four to five times more likely to occur than in a hypothetical world in which global warming had never happened.

Lagos, Mexico City and Singapore were among the most highly exposed major cities, with human-induced heat increasing health risks to millions.

Researchers at Climate Central, led by chief scientist Ben Strauss, looked for a way to bridge the gap between planetary-scale global warming — usually expressed as Earth's average surface temperature compared to an earlier reference period — to people's day-to-day experience.

"Diagnosing climate fingerprints lets people know that their experiences are symptoms of climate change," Strauss told AFP. "It represents a signal and shows we must adapt."

Using seven decades of high-resolution daily temperature data from the European Centre for Medium-range Weather Forecasts (ECMWF) and two dozen climate models, Strauss and his team created a tool — the Climate Shift Index.

Australia PM decries 'racially motivated' killing of Aboriginal boy

AFP, Sydney

Australia's prime minister yesterday expressed his sorrow at the killing of a 15-year-old Aboriginal boy, insisting that the attack was clearly "racially motivated".

The alleged murder of Cassius Turvey in the western city of Perth has sparked outrage nationwide, with protests planned and rights activists decriing what they said was another symptom of systemic racism.

Lamenting Turvey's death as a "terrible tragedy", Prime Minister Anthony Albanese insisted "we're a better country than that, and my heart goes out to the family and the friends".

Turvey died in hospital after a man allegedly jumped out of a vehicle, chased him and hit him on the head with a metal pole.

the Myanmar Army to work together for improving the relations, conducting combined disaster management exercises and exchanging information.

He said the Rohingya people's long stay in Bangladesh might create security risks and stressed on quick repatriation to avert any such challenges in the future.

Earlier in December 2019, Bangladesh's then army chief Gen Aziz Ahmed visited Myanmar.

The delegation's visit to Dhaka takes place weeks after Myanmar military violated the border during clashes with armed rebel group Arakan Army.

Bangladesh summoned the Myanmar ambassador in Dhaka several times and also sought China's help in stopping such border violations.

At an event in Dhaka on October 26, Chinese Ambassador Li Jiming said the Chinese ambassador in Myanmar conveyed Bangladesh's message to Myanmar authorities and got positive feedback.

In 2017, about 750,000 Rohingyas fled to Bangladesh amid a violent military crackdown. No repatriation has taken place yet.

JP lawmaker Ranga shown the door

JP chairman is empowered to make any decision unilaterally.

As per the power, the JP chief can form, reconstitute, and scrap any committee at any level even if the action goes against the other parts of the JP charter.

The latest development in the main opposition would widen the rift between Quader and Raushan groups, JP insiders said.

After Ranga was relieved, Raushan, who is having medical treatment in Bangkok, in a statement said Quader made the decision, violating parliamentary rules and using the undemocratic power as the JP chairman.

"No change has been brought in the post of the opposition chief whip," she said.

Talking to this correspondent, Ranga said the JP chairman does not have any right to relieve him of the post of opposition chief whip.

"Only the opposition leader can do it. But GM Quader is not the opposition leader; he is the deputy leader of the opposition."

Golam Moshi, political secretary to Raushan Ershad, yesterday told The Daily Star that Quader's decision of relieving Ranga was not correct.

"Ranga, a longtime leader of this party, has a huge contribution to this organisation. He is a tested, committed and veteran leader of the party."

"A leader like him cannot be relieved whimsically and on the basis of unilateral decision of a person," said Moshi, also former Bangladesh ambassador to Saudi Arabia.

Also the lawmaker from Rangpur-1, Ranga in a discussion organised by Raushan group on October 23 vowed to oust Quader and JP Secretary General Mujibul Haque Chundu from the party as they were acting against Raushan.

The fresh conflict between Quader and Raushan, the wife of former president and JP founder HM Ershad, started brewing when she suddenly on August 31 convened the party's 10th council on November 26.

Sources at the JP told this correspondent that pro-Raushan group has planned to oust Quader from the party helm in the council and take its control.

On September 1, JP Parliamentary Party at a meeting decided to remove Raushan from the post of the opposition leader and a letter was submitted to the Jatiya Sangsad Speaker to this end.

On September 14, Quader, the younger brother of Ershad, relieved Ranga of all party posts, including that of presidium member of JP, for "siding with Raushan".

Wildcat bus strike

a hospital. But he failed to go there as no buses left for Rangpur from Gaibandha.

"I am a heart patient... Who will take the responsibility, if I face any problem?" he asked our correspondent in Bogura.

Mizan, a resident of Balichara area of Rangpur city, his wife and three-year-old son went to Kamarpara bus station around 10:30am to travel to Dhaka. But he had to return home.

He said he did not know about the strike.

Businessman Sabbir Hossain and his friend Shahriar Sayeed of the Melananda area of Jamalpur went to Rangpur yesterday morning from Dhaka. They planned to return home the same day.

Around 9:30am, he went to the bus ticket counter but found it closed.

Dhaka University student Pankaj Kumar Roy went to the bus counter in Rangpur to come to Dhaka. He has an exam on Sunday.

He was desperately looking for a bus ticket.

Transport workers were not happy either because of the strike.

Momin Mia, a helper of Shyamoli Paribahan, said, "I will not get the money to buy food. There's no money if there's no bus on the roads."

Aminul Islam, general secretary of Bogura Motor Owners Group, said they were only following the directives of Rangpur Divisional Motor Owners Association.

"We stopped the Rangpur bound buses for the time being," he said.

On October 18, Khulna District Bus, Minibus, Coach and Microbus Owners' Association and Khulna Motor Sramik Union jointly called a strike from October 20 "demanding three-wheelers to be taken off the roads".

The BNP rally was held there on October 22.

On Wednesday, Barishal District Bus Malik Group called a strike on all routes to Barishal for November 4 and 5. A BNP rally is supposed to be held there on November 5.

Elon Musk takes control of Twitter tweeted Thierry Breton, the EU internal market commissioner, in response to Musk's "bird" message.

Musk said Twitter "cannot become a free-for-all hellscape where anything can be said with no consequences".

He had previously vowed to dial back content moderation and was expected to clear the way for former US president Donald Trump to return to the platform.

The then-president was blocked over concerns he would ignite more violence like the deadly attack on the Capitol in Washington to overturn his election loss.

"I am very happy that Twitter is now in sane hands, and will no longer be run by Radical Left Lunatics and Maniacs that truly hate our country," Trump said on his Truth Social platform yesterday.

Far-right users were quick to rejoice over the purchase on the network, posting comments such as "masks don't work" and other taunts, under the belief that moderation rules will now be relaxed.

"Free speech will always prevail," tweeted Republican Senator Marsha Blackburn of Tennessee, prompting hundreds of mostly angry replies accusing her of hypocrisy.

Among Musk's first acts in power on Thursday were the reported firing of chief executive Parag Agrawal and other senior officials — though the company did not reply to AFP's request for comment and Agrawal still listed himself as CEO on his Twitter profile.

Agrawal previously went to court to hold Musk to the terms of the deal, and the takeover came just before a deadline imposed by the judge.

Musk, who is using a combination of his own money, funds from wealthy investors and bank loans to finance the deal, has conceded he is overpaying for a company that has regularly posted eye-watering losses.

Twitter says it has 238 million daily users, dwarfed by the likes of Facebook's two billion, but has not been able to monetize in the same way as its rivals.

However, Twitter holds an outsized influence on public debate because it is the favoured platform for many companies, politicians, journalists and other public figures.

Musk, though, has expressed frustration at content moderation and critics fear his ownership will be seen as a greenlight for hate speech and misinformation.

Musk is already the boss of car firm Tesla and rocket company SpaceX and it is not clear what his Twitter role might be, though unconfirmed reports suggested he might become interim CEO.

The closure of the deal marks the culmination of a long back-and-forth between the billionaire and the social network.
