Winter sees more children suffering from PNEUMONIA

MOUDUD AHMED SUJAN

With winter's arrival, physicians have urged parents to stay extra cautious to keep their children safe from pneumonia.

They advised the parents to ensure proper and timely treatment if their children get infected with the disease to avoid fatalities.

At Dhaka Medical College Hospital, the number of children suffering from pneumonia have already started rising.

"We've been receiving some eight to 10 childhood pneumonia patients every day recently. It will continue rising, as November and December is the peak season for pneumonia cases in our country," Prof Iflat Ara Shamsad, head of the paediatric department at DMCH.

Pneumonia, which is caused by bacteria, viruses or fungi, leaves children to fight for their lives, as their lungs fill with pus and fluid caused by the disease.

"Falling sick with cold and cough sees a rise in winter. But there are differences between normal flu and pneumonia. We have to be extra cautious for children, especially those under the age of five," said Iflat.

As pneumonia is an infection of the lungs, its most common symptoms are coughing, trouble breathing and fever, she said.

"Children with pneumonia usually experience fast breathing, or their lower chest may draw in or retract when they inhale. In case of normal cough or fever, there's no breathing issue."

If parents observe pneumonia symptoms among their children, they should visit a doctor or hospital immediately, she suggested.

Pneumonia is still the main cause of deaths for children under five in Bangladesh. But if intervened timely, pneumonia can be cured, according to the experts.

- Children under 5 most vulnerable to pneumonia
- Bacteria, viruses, fungi common causes for infection
- Common symptoms coughing, breathing problems, fever
- Over 24,000 children die of pneumonia in country per year
- Most deaths prevented with vaccines, low-cost antibiotics
- Medical access not sufficient to tackle disease

Surveys have found that parents often take their children to the hospital at the last moment, especially when they need critical interventions like oxygen support.

As a result, more than 24,000 children still die of pneumonia in the country every year, which is around 18 percent of all child deaths under the age of five.

Most pneumonia deaths can be prevented with vaccines, and easily treated with low-cost antibiotics. But a small percentage of one-year-olds in Bangladesh still remain unvaccinated for viral pneumonia, and more than half of children suffering from pneumonia symptoms cannot avail effective medical treatment.

Prisoners must get proper treatment: HC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday said prisoners across the country must be provided with proper treatment if they feel sick, as they have the legal right to medical treatment.

"Prisoners are usually kept detained in jails. It is not acceptable if they are not provided with proper treatment in times of sickness," the HC bench of Justice KM Kamrul Kader and Justice Mohammad Ali said during hearing a writ petition filed by Supreme Court lawyer Md JR Khan Robin on February 18, 2019, seeking necessary directives on this issue.

The bench also asked the government bodies concerned to appoint doctors on deputation to vacant posts at the prisons and submit a report after complying with the order by December 11.

Petitioner JR Khan Robin told The Daily Star that there are reportedly only four doctors in 68 prisons across the country, where around 87,000 prisoners currently stay detained.

A total of 137 posts of doctors in the prisons reportedly are vacant, he added.
