She said the US would resettle more Rohingyas but did not mention any figure. In a statement yesterday, Noyes said as part of the US' unwavering partnership with Bangladesh and comprehensive response to Rohingya refugees, the Biden Administration is very pleased to establish, in coordination with UNHCR and other resettlement countries, a resettlement programme for the most vulnerable Rohingyas refugees. She said now that the Rohingya crisis has become protracted due to the genocide by the Myanmar regime, it is time to look for a comprehensive approach to the solutions until Rohingya repatriation is possible in a safe and sustainable manner.

Under an agreement signed in 2017, Myanmar agreed to take back the Rohingyas who fled in 2016 and 2017. They would be more than a million. And those who fled before that would be around 35,000.

Analysts who study refugee issues say the previous record suggests that the US resettled a small number of Rohingyas. Only more than 9,000 Rohingya refugees have resettled in the US over the past decade, primarily from Malaysia.
