Germany was my “mean machine”, with the likes of Michael Ballack and Oliver Kahn still there and it was in 2006 that I made up my mind regarding who to support and why.

However, that was also when I set my sights on many a player from each team, some of whom are regarded as the world's greatest at the moment, some who may have just played their last World Cup.

For fans like me, this particular tournament is of immense value, mixing the joy of seeing the next footballing magicians to emerge with the sorrow of saying goodbye to the ones that made a generation fall in love the game.

While league football will still be an option for some, we have to accept that this may be the last time we see some of the greatest footballers to have existed on the world field.

As a Germany fan, it is hard to accept that the lanky yet powerful Thomas Muller will not be sneaking in goal after goal one last time on the biggest stage. Similarly, the absence of Marco Reus and Mats Hummels will remain an open wound.

It has, however, been most difficult to accept the exit of Belgian captain and forward Eden Hazard. I first remember falling in love with just his dribbling. Then came the assists and majestic goals at Chelsea.

His performance in the 2018 World Cup was next to incomparable, as he carried his team to the semis like it was a piece of cake.

Among his teammates were the brilliant Kevin De Bruyne and Romelu Lukaku, who may also have played their last World Cup.

Another who caught the world's attention in 2018 was none other than the elegant Luka Modric, perhaps also making his final World Cup bow.

The Croat captain captured hearts across the globe, carrying a hard-working and talented team to the final against France, who then featured a precocious Kylian Mbappe.

That teenager's ascendency since has seen him become the most prized player in football and while he will undoubtedly continue to excite, farewells will also be due for French legends Olivier Giroud -- who became the top-scoring French player of all time at this World Cup -- and Antoine Griezmann.

He is among a host of others that feature the likes of Welsh superstar Gareth Bale, Uruguay's Edinson Cavani and Luis Suarez, Polish veteran Robert Lewandowski and Mexican goalie Guillermo Ochoa, who stole attention every time he had taken to the World Cup stage.

We have witnessed some fantastic football from so-called “smaller teams” and while we appreciated their latest stars, we must accept that Senegal’s Sadio Mane, Denmark’s Christian Eriksen, South Korea’s Son Heung-min and Japan legend Maya Yoshida will likely not be around in 2026.

As this World Cup comes closer to a finish, it brings with us the probable end on the world stage of players like Portugal's "grand old man" Pepe, Argentina's Angel Di Maria and Paolo Dybala, Brazil's calm and collected Thiago Silva and nearing-40s Dani Alves.

However, what will make the biggest, and perhaps, the most painful difference from this World Cup to the next is the absence of the two people considered the greatest to have ever done it -- Lionel Messi and Cristiano Ronaldo.

League after league, they have proven their skills, agility, sheer gift from God and more. On the world stage, we have witnessed them drag their teams to preliminaries, knockouts, and even finals.

Their supremacy has been unparalleled from the moment their feet first touched the ball and their entire careers have been nothing short of fairy tales -- fairy tales we were privileged to be a part of.

To realise that we will no more see a game featuring Argentina or Portugal with the grandiose of Messi or Ronaldo comes straight to the heart like a sharp arrow, as an entire generation, and those before it, learned how beautiful football can really be from these two, as they say, "GOATS (greatest of all time)".

This World Cup is nearing its end, and it is ending with a worldful of joy, heartbreak, welcomes and goodbyes.

As for a fan like me, I am now preparing myself, as I believe others are too, for a new generation of brilliant footballers, preparing to see if we ever find our new GOATS (Mbappe in the running!), and to see who can make football beautiful for us on the world stage again.

FANS ATTACK HOMES IN RAJSHAHI

Meanwhile, two Argentina supporters were injured as alleged Brazil supporters, carrying sticks and iron rods, attacked their homes in Rajshahi city's Bilsimla area.

The Brazil fans also vandalised the Argentina fans' home during the attack, said Maidul Islam, OC (investigation) of Rajpara Police Station.

Rifat Ali and Raihan Hossain were admitted to Rajshahi Medical College Hospital, he said, adding that police visited the scene and recorded a general diary.

Postogola Maha Shamshan (crematorium) is being modernised at a cost of around Tk 1 crore. Dhaka South City Corporation has taken this initiative to meet a long-time demand of the city's Hindu community.

DSCC Mayor Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh inaugurated the development work of the crematorium on November 9.

DSCC has directed contractor M/s Khorshed Enterprises to complete the work within the next 14 months.

The crematorium will be developed over an area of about 1.25 acres.

Postogola Maha Shamshan sees the highest number of cremations in the country. It was founded way back in 1876, when influential zamindar Babu Gobindra Chandra Datta donated a piece of his land for the purpose.

In 1993, an electric furnace for cremation was installed at the site, but that remained unused after its initial three-month-long operation.

Although the furnace was converted to a gas-based system around 13 years ago in 2008, it has not been in use for a single day.

Leaders of the National Crematorium Committee have been calling for the crematorium's renovation and modernisation for a long time.

Around 80 bodies are cremated in this crematorium every month. Arrangements are there for those of the Hindu faith who have to be buried.
