The year of 2022 was supposed to and riddled with pitfalls. As usual, the have been one that helped nations commodity price hike had a trickleaccelerate their recovery from Coviddown effect on the overall economic induced economic shocks. Asia parameters of countries across the was all set on the path of expedited world, and South Asia also found economic growth, with World Bank itself in uncharted waters. Inflation (WB) and International Monetary soon unleashed its impact on people's Fund (IMF) growth projections costs of living and purchasing power, resulting in nations revisiting and looking favourable. According to WB's "South reworking their economic and Asia Economic Focus, Fall 2021," monetary policies and their overall outlook for 2022. published in the ending quarter of Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, Nepal was expected to reach 6.4 percent Bhutan, and Maldives all suffered. But the fate of Sri Lanka was perhaps the most unfortunate and climactic.

Sri Lanka, due to an already crumbling system riddled with corruption, nepotism, and incompetence resulting from years of unchecked dynastic political misadventures simply gave up. Unable to pay the huge amounts of external debt, the country declared bankruptcy, as its economy teetered on the brink of collapse. There was a A hike in energy prices in the shortage of food, halted sale of fuel, and no papers for students to write the uncertainties resulting from a on during exams. Sri Lankans were

People in Pakistan, too, took to the streets in the face of rising inflation. As food and fuel prices shot up. Pakistan's inflation reportedly reached a staggering 13.8 percent in May 2022. Protests broke out across the country, calling on the government to rein in the prices. As 2021 and from August 14, 2022 of the

In both countries, the urban poor and the lower-middle and middle income groups have been hit hard by the ongoing global crisis.

A price comparison study by The Business Standard, based on price lists of essentials from November 4, South Asian countries need to rise above seeking short-term internal gains and look at the bigger picture of achieving a strong regional growth trajectory and the benefits this will bring about for every player.

the country's inflation rate shot up to 27.3 percent in August, the highest since May 1975, the IMF warned of further protests. The country's inflation rate of 23.8 percent (as of November 2022) is still a pain point for the people and the government.

Bangladesh and India, while not war unfolding in Europe - made our out in the streets demanding the in such a dire strait, are facing their economic journey into 2022 perilous dismantling of the government - a own problems in pushing down Trading Corporation of Bangladesh (TCB), revealed the grim reality of the Bangladeshi people. Between the two dates, the price of coarse rice increased by 14 percent, lentils by 23 percent, bulk soybean oil by 19 percent, eggs by 45 percent, broiler chicken by 18 percent, atta by 38 percent, and potatoes by 20 percent.

The report further added that up to 55 percent post the double hike of fuel prices.

And this has adversely impacted people's disposable income and their ability to save money. A report by The Daily Star suggested that deposit growth rate has slumped to just eight percent in the July-September quarter of this year – a five-year low. Unable to make ends meet, the urban poor and those in the lower-income bracket are having to skip at least one meal a day.

India, where inflation is keeping food and fuel out of the reach of lower-income and middle-income people, turning dietary essentials such as milk into luxuries. It has been reported in The Swaddle magazine that 32 percent of households are having a tough time meeting their monthly expenses, including rent and mortgages. And companies producing entry-level consumer goods have also witnessed a decline

In Nepal, the rising prices has resulted in a unique problem: more and more people are now falling For this, South Asian countries victim to cholera, as they are not able to boil drinking water due to the increased price of energy and its supply scarcity, and also because they are not able to afford bottled water.

According to the WB's "South Asia

the region's growth is expected to slow down to a 5.8 percent average - a two percent drop from the projection of 7.1 percent stated in the aforementioned 2021 report.

The way ahead for South Asian economic recovery is clearly fraught with perils and, if anything, at this rate and with no end in sight to the European conflict, things might only get more difficult for the people and for policymakers.

It is high time the countries of The situation is also similar in this region looked towards finding localised solutions to support each other and navigate these challenges through strategic bilateral and multilateral initiatives, especially in trade. All of these countries have very strong geopolitical and socioeconomic unique selling points (USPs) which they should revisit and assess how best they could utilise to cushion the South Asian region from prevailing economic pitfalls.

We need to open up to possibilities available outside the ones offered by the West. These are uncertain times, and would require unique solutions. need to rise above seeking shortterm internal gains and look at the bigger picture of achieving a strong regional growth trajectory and the benefits this will bring about for every player. With national elections on the horizon for many of these countries, this could pose a challenge of its own. The question remains: do we have the appetite and the desire for it? Only

On Christmas Day, a video started where M Inamul Haque, a senior engineer and former director general of the River Research Institute, was slapped by a Krishak League leader in front of the national museum in Shahbag. The man supposedly slapped Haque while the latter was distributing leaflets criticising the government on behalf of the Sharbajan Biplobi Dol party, of which Haque is the convenor.

In the video, Inamul Haque can be seen shocked and distraught after being slapped. The viewers of the video, judging by their social media comments, were shocked as well to see the senior citizen being openly assaulted this way, and that too while he was speaking to a reporter. This seemingly small incident gives us a view of what the condition of our democracy currently is, and how random acts of violence against political opponents have become part and parcel of our political activities.

In fact, people who are willing circulating on social media to assault others in the name of the ruling party have been incentivised by their leaders.

> Very recently, Saddam Hossain from Dhaka University was made president of the Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL). Previously, members of Bangladesh Sadharon Chhatra Odhikar Songrokkhon Parishad had named him for leading an assault against them at the DUCSU vice-president's office at DU in December 2019. Even after the Parishad leaders filed a case against Hossain, he was never arrested, and now he is the BCL president. So, not only has he not been punished for his actions, he has seemingly been rewarded for his "leadership" in allegedly attacking the opposition.

have observed many other cases where attackers and instigators of political violence our country. have been spared.

by a group of BCL men with to violently suppress dissenting sticks, bamboo poles, a dagger and a hammer, leaving his right Haque is merely a result of that leg broken and his spine severely injured. However, the police said that he was hurt in a "scuffle" with leader, who came to Dhaka only some members of the public. But to attend his party's council The Daily Star was able to identify meeting, somehow deemed it 11 of the attackers, 10 of whom fit to hit an elderly man because were BCL activists and leaders.

Opposition politicians face attacks from the ruling party regularly, and students who dare to voice dissenting opinions are attacked on university campuses, especially in the guestrooms and public rooms. But, somehow, the affiliates of the ruling party almost always get away scot-free.

While the assault on Inamul Haque may be nothing new, it will leave a lasting mark on our democracy. It is part of a wider ongoing assault on spaces for dissent and opposition politics in Bangladesh, which have been continually shrinking during the ruling party's time in office. This stifling of dissenting voices, be it through legal means (by means of the Digital Security Act, for example) or through physical violence, has drastically reduced the overall space for politics in voices. The slapping of Inamul attitude. It is an act of arrogance. The union-level Krishak League he thought that he was right to do so, and also because he was sure that nothing would happen to him as a consequence. This sentiment is mirrored in the victim's statement, who said that he would not be seeking any redress since he has no hope of justice. Is this where we are at as a nation?

The political culture that has Back in 2018, a leader of the been bred in the country by the Rajshahi University student and ruling party is one of impunity, doubt the existence of any intent quota reform movement, Toriqul where party members are, of theirs to act as such.

If so, we have only reached this situation due to a lasting trend of denial of justice, and assaults on the rights to dissent and to engage in opposition politics.

With the political field heating up ahead of the national election in 2023 and major opposition political figures behind bars, the situation is likely to get worse. The onus remains on the government and the ruling party to ensure that the latter's activists do not stand in the way of political freedoms and do not engage in political violence in the run-up to the elections. Of course, one cannot help but
