Reunited, finally Elderly man who couldn't remember details about family meets loved ones

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

An elderly man who returned from Saudi Arabia on Friday night was reunited with his family yesterday after Brac took a step to help him.

Abul Kashem, who hails from Chattogram's Halishahar, went to the Middle Eastern country about 25 years ago, Brac Migration Programme said in a statement.

Kashem finally met his family yesterday afternoon. After landing at Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport, Kashem could not remember the names of his family members and his home address, even though he seemed physically well, said Brac Migration Programme Head Shariful Hasan in the statement.

However, he was speaking in a local Chattogram dialect, so it was initially assumed that he could be from that region. He seemed to be in his 60s, Shariful said.

As per immigration police's information, Kashem returned home with a "travel pass" and did not have any passport, he added.

Law enforcers at the airport handed Kashem to Brac on Saturday, as the non-government organisation provides different support services to returnee and outbound migrant workers at the airport, reads the statement.

Shariful said over the past few days, Brac employees in Chattogram ran a campaign by putting up posters that had Kashem's photo, seeking details of his family.

Later, with support from local government

'Adarsha' barred from book fair Publisher not allotted stall for printing works by 'anti-government' authors

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangla Academy has not allotted any stall for publishing house Adarsha in the upcoming book fair. The governing body of the fair published the allocation list on January 12, where Adarsha's name was absent.

According to Bangla Academy sources, Adarsha published three controversial books and a section of writers and publishers have submitted written complaints regarding them to the Academy.

One of the books -- "Bangaleer Mediocrity-r Shandhane" -- is written by Faham Abdus Salam -- the husband of BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir's eldest daughter Shamaruh Mirza.

The other two books are "Oprotiroddho Unnayaner Obhabonio Kothamala" by Faiz Ahmad Taiyeb and "Unnayan Bivram" by Zia Hasan.

Sources also mentioned that the three authors are known as "anti government" faces on social media.

AKM Muzahidul Islam, member secretary of the book fair committee, told The Daily Star, "Adarsha was supposed to get a four-unit stall. This year, they applied for a pavilion, which we were also willing to allocate. However, objections regarding some of their books were raised and we found that they conflict with our policy."

"There are various statements against the government, Bangabandhu and Chhatra League in those books," he explained.
