THE EFFECTS OF sunlight on skin health and beauty

Although sun exposure can cause skin damage, accelerated ageing, and even skin cancer, these risks can be mitigated by using common sun safety measures. Sun rays can be beneficial for the skin as it helps in the synthesis of vitamin D and aid in the treatment of jaundice, and skin diseases like psoriasis, acne, and eczema. So, this time, allow yourself to glow with pride in stride as we discover some amazing benefits of the sun for skin health and beauty.

The “sunshine vitamin” or vitamin D is crucial for skin health and renewal. Vitamin D deficiency levels are typical. That is a concern because vitamin D absorbs calcium and phosphorus, which helps our bones to stay strong. Sunlight stimulates the skin to produce vitamin D which anyone can receive. The development, maintenance, and metabolism of skin cells are all aided by vitamin D in its active form, calcitriol. Moreover, it boosts skin immunity and fights free radicals that cause premature ageing. So, for your own good, soak up some rays and get to know a pleasant sunlit area!

Jaundice, psoriasis, acne, and eczema are just a few of the skin disorders that can be treated with sun exposure. According to research, heliotherapy, or using sunshine therapeutically, is extremely effective at easing psoriasis symptoms. In fact, by causing the production of a substance in the skin that acts to reduce the swelling that causes eczema, sunlight can alleviate the symptoms of the condition. With all that, the skin can return to its natural condition and thus be healthier. This will also ensure that you can apply your cherished cosmetics to your skin without any guilt of harming it.

Nevertheless, those with pale skin usually have the disadvantage of burning from the sun faster than those with darker skin. Additionally, when the sun is shining more directly, you run a higher risk of developing a sunburn when outside. This often occurs between the hours of 10 AM and 4 PM. If required to protect your skin, you can try to avoid direct sunlight at these hours.

Still not convinced enough to enjoy the sun? Well, gear up your armor to revel in the light. One of the greatest and simplest methods to safeguard the health and beauty of your skin at any age is to put on sunscreen. Regular use of sunscreen aids in avoiding high exposure to ultraviolet rays and thus reduces chances of skin sunburn, skin cancer, and early aging. If you put on some sunscreen every day, you will not have to worry about your face getting any tanner or developing any more hyperpigmentation, melasma, or dark patches.

Remember, the sun’s rays warm the oceans, move the air, create our climate patterns, and power the photosynthesis of plants, which in turn, supplies us with oxygen and food. So, while we live, so shall the sun. And during it all, you can take up the beauty of the sun to revive the beauty of your skin.

My ode to the sun: Thoughts on spring

Today, I saw a cuckoo perched on a bamboo shed amid the petunia blooms in the nursery. I was ecstatic as it meant spring is around the corner. In a few days' time when the cuckoo will sing his sweet song to lure his girl, it will usher the sunny and sprightly boshonto or spring days.

Spring or boshonto is the last of the six Bangla seasons and happens to fall between winter and summer, spreading over the Bangla months of Falgun and Chaitra (mid-February to mid-April).

I am not fond of the dew-drenched, foggy mornings; the chilly afternoons, or the stone-cold nights. Winter is not for me. I am a tropical person through and through. I love my sun, light and breezy, scorching and humid — almost torturous — but that's my kind of weather.

I am glad that winter here is just one unbearable month and when the sun will shine, I will not look frumpy with a shawl wrapped around my body anymore. Gone will be the mufflers, the earmuffs, and the cardigans.

Spring for me means marigolds in the hair; splashes of saffron, or yellow in the dresses. It means sticking out an orangey tongue while having ice lollies, slurping up green coconuts, and seeing the lively green come back to nature. The fun is limitless.

Spring revives and reinvigorates the dead barren wintry nature and me too. I love looking at nature with my microscopic lens. The ladybugs and the bees will be getting ready for business, hibernating animals will wake up from their long slumber. My sparrows from last season will be busy re-building their nest in the air-conditioning gaps.

I will see my fern fronds curl up and rise to seek the sunlight. The leafless barren trees will bear tiny green heads signalling the new birth of its emerald green leaves, new seedlings that were lying dormant in the ground will sprout and their fragile stems will be dangling in the breeze. There is so much pleasure to soak up from these tiny intangible happenings around me.

Although the lovey-dovey connotations of spring are clichéd, and here in Bangladesh, the first day of spring coinciding with St Valentine's Day brings out the romance in full vigour. But setting aside the mushy stuff, I will welcome my spring sun will open arms.

So, this weekend, look for that favourite yellow sari in your wardrobe, get it laundered and starched, paint your nails red because as the song says — 'Boshoto eshe geche.'

5 ways to make Valentine's Day memorable

Valentine's Day is the only day of the year where you can be cheesy without feeling bad. You can let your imaginations run wild and unapologetically express your love towards your significant other through various gestures. While your other half will likely appreciate even the smallest of gestures, sometimes, you should go that extra mile. So, what can you do to show your favourite person how much they mean to you? Obviously, dining at fancy restaurants is too cliched at this point and so is any other hangout spot you can think of. Worry not though because we have five unique ideas that will without a doubt take your Valentine's Day to the next level.

Rooftop camping to watch sunset/rise

There is something magical about watching the sun rise and set. No wonder they are so romanticised in the movies! Why not translate some of that magic into your Valentine's Day plan? Finding a good spot in the city can be tough but your rooftop will just about get the job done. Just imagine; you and your girl on the roof, watching the sun rise or set, a charcuterie board and some nice music. Doesn't it sound like a ball? Perhaps you two can also dance underneath the stars before or after (depending on which one you opt for).

Taking her to a mountaintop or the beach for sunset or sunrise

Of course, this will require a bit more planning than the previous idea, but if you have the time and resources, swap out the hustle and bustle of the city for the serene backdrop of the mountain or the enchanting view of the ocean. Take a day or two off to show her how much she means to you and take her away to Sajek Valley or Sairu Hill Resort or Cox's Bazar to watch the sun come up or go down. You also get the chance to have a proper mini vacation while you're at it

Learning to cook her favourite dish

The quickest way to a person's heart is through their stomach and that goes double when the dish you prepare happens to be their meal of choice. There is nothing more romantic in this world than you attempting to cook your girl's favourite dish and making a whole evening out of it by arranging a candlelight dinner. Beats going to a restaurant any day and way more intimate. We advise that you get started as soon as you read this because cooking is tricky and getting it right might require some practice. But hey, remember that it's the thought that counts. The gesture is enough to sweep her off her feet, the food tasting good will be the icing on the cake.

Going on a little pampering adventure

Have you seen the latest "pick a card" trend on TikTok? Basically, what you do is write down two options on two separate cards and make your girl choose one. For instance, one card has "sushi" written on it and the other has "pizza," then for the next round, she gets to choose between two dessert places and for the final round she gets to choose between two of her favourite shops to get something nice for herself. Not only does this make for a fun little adventure throughout the day, but this will also show your girl how well you know her (plus you don't have to stress on picking places because the cards will do it for you!)

Renting an entire cinema hall to watch her favourite movie

Saving the grandest of the lot for last. This one might be a bit tricky to pull off because of the limited options available and getting a cinema to agree to rent out an entire hall to you (note: you are more likely to succeed with a local cinema).

However, if you can pull it off, it will make for the best Valentine's Day your partner will ever have. An entire theatre, playing their favourite movie, just for her. Scratch that, it will probably be the best day they will ever have.

2023 Lace and tulle in FASHION

Alas, we are here. Seems like we have time travelled to the future. The first month has sped past us at the speed of light as we fail to keep up, dazed and confused in the sparkling haze that is the festive season in Dhaka! Twinkling wedding lights adorn streets all around, invitation cards jostle for space on our coffee tables and there is endless discussion about the all-important winter wardrobe that will have us ready for this wonderful whirlwind!

In that regard winter fashion this year is all about feminine, sophisticated styles with a hefty dose of high-octane glamour. It's a wondrous time of the year; there is a palpable sense of excitement in the air, redolent with endless possibilities of festivity and fervour. This spirit is channelled marvellously by the fashionistas of Dhaka who leave no stone unturned when it comes to dressing up at their absolute best!

Giving heavy velvets and brocades a miss, this year's trends are veering towards softer, delicate fabrics that highlight the feminine silhouette in all its glory. Amidst the flurry of trends that turn up on the runways every season, lace seems to have made a comeback. There's something about the wispy nature of it that is just so beautiful; its delicate weaves adorn a woman's form most exquisitely.

Versatility is the greatest virtue of lace; from gowns to dresses to saris and lehengas — literally, any article of clothing is brought to life when fashioned from lace. Whichever form it is rendered in, be it Guipure, Chantilly, or Macramé — lace is beautiful in every avatar.

If lace were to have a sister it'd be tulle! Its 'now-you-see-it-now-you-don't' nature makes it the perfect foil for luscious embroideries that make the outfit look like a second skin on the wearer. Again, the possibilities are endless with this gauzy, wispy fabric. Choose a mint green Chantilly sari paired with an embellished blouse for your friend's engagement ceremony, and a berry tulle lehenga for her destination wedding.

A black mini-Guipure number will be fabulously chic for your cousin's swanky cocktail and a blush pink tulle gown will make you the belle of the ball for your friend's reception! Tulle is also perfect for ghagra; add a layered cancan skirt underneath a navy tulle ghagra and pair it with a stunning wraparound blouse in satin. Throw some diamonds on and voila!

Lastly, if you are the one to play it safe, a Chantilly lace sari is always a winner in every scenario. Choose an unusual shade such as bronze, purple, or olive, and wear it with an interesting blouse to let your light shine through!

A GUIDE TO BUYING CHOCOLATES FOR YOUR VALENTINE

Chocolates and Valentine's Day have become synonymous. Gifting a box of chocolates on this special day is bound to put a smile on your partner's face. However, among so many different options to choose from, it can become quite difficult to decide which one to go for.

So, here are a few easy ways to pick the perfect chocolate for your valentine.

Do your research

If you are planning to give your loved one the gift of chocolate this Valentine's Day, then proper research is a must for you. There are usually three types of chocolate to choose from — milk, dark, and white. These chocolates can then be filled with a variety of treats like nuts, caramel, cream, or fresh fruit. There are also truffles, which are different from regular chocolate candies, nut bars, and much more.

Prioritise their preference

When it comes to chocolates, everyone has their preferences. Some like dark chocolates and others enjoy a mouthful of rich, white chocolate. Understand what your partner likes. Don't buy a full box of caramel-filled chocolate if your significant other can't stand the taste of it. The idea is to customise the chocolate according to their preference.

Pay attention to ingredients

The chocolate you will choose must be of good quality and made with fresh ingredients. Apart from that, you must also keep in mind if there are any ingredients in the chocolate that might cause an allergic reaction. A lot of people are allergic to nuts, so if your valentine is also one of those people, it would be better to avoid giving her chocolates that contain nuts.

A classic heart-shaped chocolate box

For years and years, the tradition of gifting a heart-shaped chocolate box on Valentine's Day has been proven to be the safest option. This will be a good choice if you just started to date someone or are about to ask them out on this special day.

Chocolate goodie box

If you want to go a little extra and pamper your partner with different types of chocolates, then you can buy a nice box and place the chocolates there instead of just handing them in a bag. It will show that you put in an extra effort for them. You can either make the box yourself from scratch or from the many online pages and stores that will do it for you.

Chocolate bouquet

Are you one of those who like being a little creative with their gifts? Then a chocolate bouquet is a perfect gift to give to your valentine. A chocolate bouquet is a chocolate arrangement designed to resemble traditional floral bouquets. It is a beautiful blend of chocolates and a bouquet. So, if you think about it, you are actually giving two gifts in one. Genius!

How to get back into the habit of reading?

There was a time when most people read books; it was one of the most popular sources of entertainment. February gives us the perfect opportunity to get in touch with that long-lost love. The Ekushey Boi Mela being an event of national significance gives us the perfect opportunity to rekindle our love for books.

Here are 6 different ways to regrow the old habit of reading books.

Find your own little reading space

A good reading space has a low noise level, ample lighting, and comfortable seating. Some people like to read on their beds or couch. A reader needs to find his or her comfortable reading space. In that little zone, the person can simply dive into the world of literature without any interruption or distraction.

Start with a genre you would enjoy

Not everyone enjoys everything. Each person has a liking for a different genre. Some like thrillers, some prefer works of fantasy, and others may like horrors or romances. Different people have different tastes. So, it's best if a person tries to start with his or her preferred genre. That way, one will be able to enjoy their book to the fullest. Moreover, he or she will also be able to grow the habit of reading with great amusement.

Begin with short stories

Short stories are just as narrative as novels. Moreover, they can help one crave longer works of fiction. If one prefers non-fiction, it can be found within an anthology of essays. One can also look for creative non-fiction. These are written like fiction but are often autobiographical stories about the author's own life.

Re-read an old book

Sometimes it's best if we just re-read an old book to regrow our old habits. If not the whole book then maybe some certain chapters, as those old vibes can bring out amazing energy within oneself to read. Old books can refresh our memory and can also splash those old feelings within us. Nevertheless, the old vibes would feel different when one re-reads an old book because a certain amount of time has passed and often a book might seem like it somehow or so might be related to us. That ambiance while reading an old book, can indeed bring back the forgotten habit of book reading.

Get a reading partner

This is a unique and fun technique to regrow the old habit of reading books. One can pair up with another person and choose a book to read until a certain page. Later they can discuss whatever they have read so far and can move forward with it. This way, people can become more and more interested in re-reading books again.

Visiting book cafes

Book cafes are the most perfect spot for a person to enjoy his or her time. Moreover, they are an absolute place for someone to regrow the old habit of reading books. In a book cafe, one can choose the choice of their books according to their preferred genre and can read there. There they can order food and drink from the given menu and can spend a good amount of time. Nevertheless, they can also take pictures or maybe just spend some quality time with a friend if they want to.

Some of the popular book cafes are Bengal Boi, DipanPur, and Kabita Cafe. If one visits any of the mentioned cafes above there's a guaranty that they will enjoy their time to the fullest.
