

Apply innovative ideas to build a smart Bangladesh

PM tells BCS officers

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday asked the BCS officers to utilise their innovative power and talents in building a smart Bangladesh.

The premier was addressing the certificate-awarding and closing ceremony of the 74th foundation training course of BCS officers at her office in the city.

She said the country witnessed a radical change in a short period and asked the new officers to continue this development trend.

Hasina said they will build the country as a smart Bangladesh by 2041 through making the population, economy and all social systems smart.

She described the fresh officers as the soldiers in the implementation of the "2041 Smart Bangladesh" vision as they will go to higher posts in the government services gradually in future.

The premier reiterated her call to the countrymen to show austerity in using resources including electricity, water and gas as it is not known when the Russia-Ukraine war will stop.

The price of every commodity and transport cost went up throughout the world due to the sanctions and counter-sanctions, she said.

The PM asked the administration to promote austerity in the use of resources and raise food production in the country to offset the global crisis.

Despite repeated accidents, the situation at rail crossings stays the same. People continue to ignore rules just to save some time. While visiting Dhaka Airport Railway Station yesterday, this photojournalist witnessed the chaos firsthand. Clockwise from left, commuters cross a rail track at the station despite a train approaching from a distance. Even though pathways exist for passengers, time and again, they choose a shortcut by getting on the tracks to reach other platforms. Sometimes, they even stand beyond the rail crossing and dangerously close to moving trains.

'Choosing control over protection'

Speakers tell webinar on draft Personal Data Protection Act

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The draft Personal Data Protection Act will lead more towards the control of citizens' data as opposed to its protection, said speakers at an online discussion yesterday.

"The draft law can be a threat to people's right to privacy," said Saimum Reza Talukder, senior lecturer at the School of Law, Brac University, adding that there is a risk of this law being used against critics of the government and those expressing difference of opinion.

The discussion was organised by the Forum for Bangladesh Studies.

He also commented that the law can threaten the cyber security of the state because it does not clearly define how it will ensure which of the different government organisations will have access to what category of data.

Talukder also commented on how the law promises the officers charged with implementing the law indemnity and protection from prosecution, stating, "In the eyes of law, everybody is the same."

Senior journalist Kamal Ahmed commented that the law is more about protecting the interests of the state and the government, protecting the state's sovereignty and cracking down on crime.

"It is less about the protection of personal data. While trying to prioritise security, the law overlooked the rights of the citizens," added Kamal.

"Where is the guarantee that power will not be abused?" he asked.

The law can threaten the cyber security of the state because it does not clearly define how it will ensure which of the different government organisations will have access to what category of data.

Ensure anyone can file case to save environment

Recommends JS body

RASHIDUL HASAN

A parliamentary body yesterday recommended bringing an amendment to the "Environment Court Act" so that any citizen of the country can file a case over environmental damage, pollution, and different forms of irregularities.

The parliamentary standing committee on the Ministry of Environment, Forest and Climate Change also recommended adjusting the amount of fine to the gravity of environmental harm.

"Under the existing law, aggrieved citizens cannot just file cases over environmental damage, pollution or irregularities on their own. They need to do so through the Department of Environment, after getting permission of its director general," Saber Hossain Chowdhury, chief of the parliamentary body, told The Daily Star after emerging from the meeting.

The meeting was held at the DoE office in the capital's Agargaon. Saber, also an Awami League lawmaker, said the parliamentary watchdog has recommended dropping the provision of taking permission from the DoE's director general before filing a case.

About increasing fines, Saber said at present, the amount of fine is not proportional to the gravity of polluting the environment. Therefore, polluters prefer just paying the fine rather than addressing the issue.

For example, the committee chief said an owner of a tannery industry used to save Tk 5 to 10 lakh by shutting down the effluent treatment plant of his factory, as he only had to pay around Tk 20,000 for this crime.

Fine not proportional to gravity of harm

Amount of compensation doesn't reflect damage

PROPOSALS

Dropping provision of taking DoE permission

Determining protocol, rule to fix compensation

"We have recommended the adjustment so that the fine can be in line with the intensity of the crime of polluting the environment," he said.

The parliamentary standing committee also recommended imposing compensation relative to the harm done to the environment. "At present, there is no clear cut instruction about how to fix the amount of compensation. We have recommended determining a protocol and rule in this regard."

The meeting was also informed that in the last 13 years, the Directorate of Enforcement has imposed compensation of Tk 484.75 crore from 11,883 organisations.

Environment Minister Md Shahab Uddin and State Minister for Environment Habibun Nahar were present at the meeting among others.
