Adil, also former general secretary of Bangladesh Institute of Planners (BIP), said Rajuk remains inactive despite being aware of the issue.

"The authorities responsible for regulating buildings during and after construction do not play their role properly. Residents have to bear the cost of their inefficacy," he said.

He also mentioned that the building that came under fire in Siddikbazar was a commercial one. "But the use of its basement for commercial purposes was not approved."

"The approval process is not faulty. It's the lack of monitoring and supervision of the buildings or high-rises during and after the construction phase that can result in accidents. The liability of such incidents falls on the authorities concerned," he added.
