SUNDARGANJ UPAZILA HEALTH COMPLEX

A functioning operating theatre after 41 years

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bogura

After nearly 41 years of its establishment, Sundarganj Upazila Health Complex in Gaibandha got a functioning operating theatre (OT) recently.

The 50-bed government hospital was established in 1982, but its operating theatre remained unusable.

On March 19, the hospital authorities conducted their first-ever surgery at the OT.

On the first day, doctors conducted Caesarean section of a woman who gave birth to a baby boy.

The hospital authority, however, said although the OT has been officially launched, it is not fully functional yet due to many limitations.

Sundarganj Upazila Health and Family Planning Officer Mohammad Abul Fatah said 10 out of 17 medical-officer posts are currently lying vacant at the establishment, as only seven doctors are providing services.

The hospital requires some medical equipment, including a diathermy machine, which is used to relieve pain or destroy unhealthy tissues. Moreover, it also needs consultants and anaesthesia specialists to make the OT fully functional.

"Currently, doctors are conducting only C-section operations here," said the officer.

According to sources at Sundarganj Upazila Parishad, about two lakh people out of eight lakh residents of Sundarganj upazila live in char areas.

Jahurul Islam, a resident of Fulchhari upazila headquarters, said,

"The Sundarganj Upazila Health Complex was established over four decades ago, but people are being deprived of emergency medical services as there has been no functional operating theatre since the beginning of its journey."

Home maker Nadira Akter of Char Vatikapasia village, said in case of emergency operation, residents of the char area have to go to a hospital in the district headquarters or Rangpur Medical College Hospital.

"Both hospitals are nearly 50 kilometres away from my village. Due to the lack of emergency medical services, patients often die on the way to the hospital," Nadira added.

Bangladesh is home to around a million Rohingya people, most of whom fled a 2017 military crackdown in neighbouring Myanmar, which is now subject to a UN genocide investigation.

A delegation from Myanmar's military regime travelled to Bangladesh this month to interview

How a UNO's initiative is empowering a generation

ANANTA YUSUF

Narsingdi's Palash upazila is making a major impact on the education and future aspirations of its young citizens.

At least 113 language clubs have been established in local schools, providing students with the opportunity to learn new languages, read books and magazines, and receive motivation and guidance on various educational and career-related topics.

And this has been made possible through the efforts of Upazila Nirbahi Officer Md Robiul Alam, said locals.

When Robiul first joined the Narsingdi UNO office last December, he observed that many schools did not have such clubs or development courses for children.

As part of his job, he regularly visits schools and assesses their operations. "I realised that I could turn my visits into something meaningful for the students," Robiul told The Daily Star recently.

Robiul's solution was a multi-faceted approach that included visiting schools every day, motivating students with gifts during assembly sessions and launching a language club where young students could explore various languages, literature and literary figures.

He named this initiative "Know Your Potential".

In December, Robiul approached parents, teachers, and headteachers to gauge their interest in the project, and was met with positive response.

With 113 language clubs now established in 64 primary schools, 36 secondary schools and nine madrasas, 2,445 students in Palash upazila now have access to these clubs and their resources.

A teacher from every school is assigned to run the language club. Students read newspapers, magazines, and different books. The assigned teacher helps them with writing and encourages them to speak in English and write book reviews regularly.

Dilruba Yeasmin, upazila primary education officer of Palash, said every Thursday, around 15 to 20 students from grades four and five in 64 primary schools
