WOMEN labour force on the rise

More involved in economic activities

MD ASADUZ ZAMAN

Female labour force participation in rural areas has increased significantly in Bangladesh thanks to women's growing involvement in the agriculture sector and urbanrural migration brought on by the global coronavirus

In 2016, the female labour force participation rate in rural areas was 38.6 percent. In 2022, it shot up to 50.89 percent, shows the latest edition of the Labour Force Survey that came out last month.

One of the reasons could be the increase in off-farm activities in recent times, which, according to Planning Minister MA Mannan, explains the increase in overall employment in the agriculture sector.

Activities that are related to crops and livestock but occur outside of the field such as processing, packaging and other forms of value addition are termed off-farm

Women are mostly involved in post-harvesting work, said Sheikh Mohammad Sayem, who was a consultant for the latest Labour Force Survey.

The mass lay-offs in garment factories, which mostly employ women, during the pandemic could also explain the spike in rural female labour force participation, he said.

"Those women mostly went back to their villages and got involved with various jobs -- they did not sit idle," said Sheikh Mohammad Sayem, associate professor of agricultural and applied statistics at Bangladesh Agricultural University.

In fact, migration from urban areas to rural regions and other towns has seen a rise, shows the Sample Vital Registration System 2021.

Out of every 1,000 people, eight moved from urban centres to rural areas in 2021, up from 4.7 in 2020. Ruralto-urban migration declined to 30.8 per thousand from 31.3 the previous year, as per the Sample Vital Registration System 2021.

Surge of garment workers heading home causes congestion at few points

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Thousands of people continued to leave Dhaka yesterday to celebrate Eid with their loved ones and their trips were relatively hassle-free.

All trains, except the Chattogram-bound Sonar Bangla Express, left Dhaka on time and no major traffic congestion was reported in the city.

However, there was some traffic at Nabinagar, Joydebpur Chowrastha, Chandra and Baipail, all key intersections on the way to the north and northwestern regions.

The intersections are surrounded by a large number of garment factories that closed for the Eid holidays in the evening.

Eid-ul-Fitr, the biggest religious festival of Muslims, will be celebrated across the country tomorrow if the crescent moon of the month of Shawwal is sighted today.

People with some 29 lakh mobile phone connections left Dhaka yesterday, Telecom Minister Mustafa Jabbar said on his Facebook page at 5:30pm.

Dhaka on Wednesday, he also mentioned.

People started leaving Dhaka in the morning and formed crowds at bus terminals and outside the Kamalapur Railway Station. The number of passengers increased sharply in the evening.

During a visit to the Gabtoli Bus Terminal around 2:30pm, this correspondent found a relatively small crowd. Many passengers alleged that they were overcharged.

Hemayet Uddin, deputy (enforcement) of Bangladesh Road Transport Authority (BRTA) who was at the terminal's control room, said although they received some complaints of overcharging, the allegations could not be proven.

Mosharref Hossain, general manager of Hanif Paribahan, said the pressure of passengers was huge in the evening. Congestion was reported from several points on the way to northern districts, he said.

The control room set up by the road transport and bridges ministry at the BRTA, reported tailbacks at Nabinagar, Joydebpur Chowrastha, Chandra and Baipail at 7:00pm.

Malaysia recalls two officials from Dhaka

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The Malaysian authorities have recalled and remanded two officers from its high commission in Dhaka on suspicion of receiving bribes of over Tk 7.5 crore for issuing visas for Bangladeshi workers and tourists.

The two suspects -- a man and a woman -- were remanded for three days until yesterday, but it was not sure whether they have been released yet, reports Free Malaysia Today (FMT), an independent news portal of Malaysia.

Sources with knowledge of the investigation said the Malaysian Anti-Corruption Commission (MACC) discovered "suspicious transactions' involving the bank accounts of the two.

MACC has frozen more than 20 bank accounts and seized assets, estimated to be worth RM3.1 million (Tk 7.5 crore), believed to belong to the two. The assets include eight plots of land.

MACC Chief Commissioner Azam Baki confirmed that the officers had been placed under remand and said the case was being investigated under Section 17(a) of the MACC Act and Section 4(1) of the Anti-Money Laundering, Anti-Terrorism Financing and Proceeds of Unlawful Activities Act.

"I do not rule out the possibility that there will be several other arrests that will be made after this," he said.

World could face record temperatures this year

Say climate scientists as El Nino weather phenomenon returns

REUTERS, Brussels

The world could breach a new average temperature record in 2023 or 2024, fuelled by climate change and the anticipated return of the El Nino weather phenomenon, climate scientists say.

Climate models suggest that after three years of the La Nina weather pattern in the Pacific Ocean, which generally lowers global temperatures slightly, the world will experience a return to El Nino, the warmer counterpart, later this year.

During El Nino, winds blowing west along the equator slow down, and warm water is pushed east, creating warmer surface ocean temperatures.

"El Nino is normally associated with record breaking temperatures at the global level. Whether this will happen in 2023 or 2024 is yet known, but it is, I think, more likely than not," said Carlo Buontempo, director of the EU's Copernicus Climate Change Service.

Women labour force on the rise

At the same time, female labour force participation in urban areas declined significantly: from 31 percent in 2016-17 to 23.6 percent in 2022.

Sharmind Neelormi, associate professor of economics at Jahangirnagar University, also attributed the trend to greater involvement in agriculture.

"Usually, a woman in a rural area would not be able to stay unemployed as per the definition of employment," she said. It is relatively easier for women in rural areas to get into family's economic activities — be it in farming or non-farm activities, said Rizwanul Islam, a former employment sector special adviser at the International Labour Organisation in Geneva.

It is quite possible that a large number of young women entered their family business when the schools were closed during the pandemic.

The education sector has also emerged as an important employer for women in rural areas, he said.

For several decades, microcredit has played an important role in generating self-employment in rural areas, and a very high proportion of the borrowers are women, according

In 2016, the overall female labour force participation rate was 36.3 percent, which increased to 42.68 percent in 2022.

"Women's access to quality jobs did not improve -- they are still lagging behind men in career and access to education and so on because of social norms. They are not reaching the mid-level or managerial level. It is not that they are incapable. This is a matter of concern," Hussain said.

Meanwhile, Malaysian Labour Department Director General Asri Rahman told Reuters that the government is investigating why and how hundreds of migrant workers from Bangladesh and Nepal were jobless, though they paid hefty sums for jobs in the Southeast Asian

He declined to provide details until completion of the inquiry.

Last week, V Sivakumar, the Malaysian minister for human resources, visited a group of 226 Bangladeshi and Nepali workers who had been in the Southeast Asian country for 40 days without the jobs they had been promised.

He described as "appalling" the crowded accommodation of the workers, and vowed to find them jobs at the earliest, but did not identify the provider of the facilities.

MACC also detained two of Sivakumar's senior officers and a businessman last week in connection with its investigation into recruitment of foreign workers. The trio were released from remand on Monday. Sivakumar was questioned twice by the MACC.

Contacted yesterday, Bangladesh Expatriates' Welfare Minister Imran Ahmad told The Daily Star that he has learnt of the arrest of two Malaysian officials. "If there is any wrongdoing, it should be investigated and those responsible for migrant workers' sufferings should be brought to book.'

Labour migration to Malaysia in the recent years has gained much international attention because of excessive recruitment cost and labour exploitation, especially when it comes to recruitment from Bangladesh.

Businesses linked to the power structures were involved in the process for years, but there were little concrete measures to stop the exploitative and defrauding practices.

Bangladesh also has questioned the country's transparency in the approval process for labour recruitment.

'Not a single worker is supposed to be jobless if the Malaysian government's foreign recruitment approval process is Bangladesh transparent," said High Commission in Malaysia in a statement last week.

Malaysia freshly recruitment from Bangladesh in August last year, four years after suspending the process in 2018 on the allegations of excessive recruitment fees, corruption and labour exploitation. A syndicate of 10 Bangladeshi agents was allowed to send workers then.

Last year, Malaysia initially allowed 25 Bangladeshi agents to recruit workers and then it was expanded to 100 agents.

According to the Bangladesh High Commission in Malaysia, 1.35 lakh Bangladeshi workers migrated to Malaysia and 2.25 lakh more are in the process.

Labour migration researchers have identified several cases involving hundreds of Bangladeshi and Nepali workers who were found jobless, though they paid hefty sums ranging from Tk 4 lakh to Tk 5 lakh.

independent Nepal-based Hall, whose researcher Andy associates are researching the labour recruitment in Malaysia, told The Daily Star that preliminary survey found many companies were hiring workers though they don't have the capacity to recruit them. "The problem lies in how the labour department approves the employers' application of foreign workers' demand. If the department properly inspects the authenticity of job demands, much of the problem would be solved," he said.

Those who return to Dhaka for Eid

Crossing off every day of the Ramadan calendar draws the joy of Eid nearer. And what makes the festival even more exciting is being finally able to return home to our loved ones to celebrate this joyous occasion.

As most people head outside Dhaka in overbooked trains and buses, navigating their way through deadly traffic, there are also people taking the opposite route they call home. Although most living people away from their families usually end up making a home away from home and creating bonds as strong as the familial ones, there is quite nothing like being able to return and coming to Dhaka to celebrate Eid -- a city

home -- to the comfort of our bedroom, to the delicious taste of home-cooked food, and to finally be able to shop for oneself and loved ones.

Students and job holders living outside Dhaka get their fair share of independence to live as they will and create a lifestyle as they wish, but this independence comes at a cost, that of missing family members back home.

And this yearning can hit at any point in time. Nostalgia can hit you in a packed room joyously laughing with friends, or even on tiresome work days when you return home to an empty house and iftar table with barely any energy left to cook food.

"After spending a year and a half outside the comfort of my house, I realised what I took for basic necessities are actually things that made me privileged. Being able to go home to the relish of iftar prepared by mum and having it with the family is a privilege, and we realise it too late," remarked Najmus Sakeeb, employee at a private company.

Even for Tusher, a student at Chittagong University, who enjoys his best life with friends on his campus, nothing hits like going home. "Before, I wouldn't be so excited about Eid, but since I've moved out for studying, this is one occasion I look most forward to. I can't wait to go back home and receive that influx of extra care and pampering from my family!" he exclaimed.

And for people living abroad, it's a different story altogether! "Although the streets here are wider and safer, my heart yearns to walk > on the lanes we played in during Eid. I save up all my leaves for Eid so that I can fly back home and not miss out on the fun. Now, more than ever, I finally relate to the song 'Shopno Jabe Bari'," remarked Eliza, who moved to Australia five years ago. But not everyone can fly back home; returning to Dhaka is a struggle on its own. If bus and train tickets are not bought early, people often resort to anything available at the last minute, from uncomfortably hanging inside buses to sitting openly above a train! Although tickets mostly sell out when we look for them, you magically seem to find them available on-spot at half the price if you just go to the bus station!

The joy of coming back to Dhaka for Eid is unmatched by any other. We rarely get to taste this feeling of euphoria, and returning home for Eid is one of those occasions. And what better time to enjoy the empty streets of Dhaka?

Members of the organisation started cleaning the area spanning one kilometre in and around Madhabkunda tourist spot main gate on Tuesday. Public representatives and local traders joined them in their endeavour, which was appreciated by the locals.

The volunteers said tourists from different parts of the country visit Madhabkunda every year. They bring polythene, chips packets and water bottles with them and trash the area while leaving.

This not only damages the environment but also harms the scenic beauty. "We noticed this during a recent visit to the area," said Delwar Hossain Chowdhury, chair of Kathalatli Samaj Kalvan Parishad.

"That's when the idea of the campaign came to my mind, which I shared with the members of the organisation," he added.

The organisation's general secretary Kawsar Ahmed Roni said Madhabkunda is under their union.

Traders worried about railway's eviction plan

The railway authorities are planning to expand the junction vard at Ishwardi Railway Station to unload goods brought by carrier trains. To do this, the space needs to be cleared, which will lead to eviction of the shops set up in the yard.

And this eviction is worrying small traders who have been demanding rehabilitation once the shops are evicted.

Meanwhile, the railway authorities have already warned the traders of an eviction drive and marked over 50 structures in the station area last week

Md Masud Hossain, a clothes trader from Ishwardi municipality area, rented a shop at Ishwardi rail junction six months ago. He invested Tk 4 lakh ahead of the Eid sales by borrowing the money. Now, the threat of eviction looms over his head as his shop has also been marked by the railway authorities.

"Just when the Eid sales started reaching their peak, I got to know that I'll have to vacate the area. My investment is in danger," said Masud.

The concern is shared by most traders in the area.

"I've been running my business at the junction, taking a lease from railway, for over a decade now. Now, my shop has been marked red," said another trader Ali Notable, while leases were originally taken from railway authorities, in most cases, the lessees are not running the business. Many have taken rent of the spaces from the lessees informally.

Rising costs drive 'tal-pakha' artisans out of profession

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Barishal

The heatwave and frequent power outages have increased the demand for "tal-pakha (handmade palm leaf fans)" made by rural artisans.

Artisans of Chandshi village of Barishal's Gournadi upazila are now spending busy days making these fans to meet the demand, selling them to people and traders from different parts of the country including the capital.

Chandshi is located about four kilometres away from Gournadi upazila headquarters; it is now known as "Pakhapalli" or the village for preparing palm-leaf hand fans. Many of these families have been in this profession more than 30 years. However recently, many artisans have started to shift to a different profession due to the shortage of raw materials and increasing production cost of these fans. Those who are still involved in this business have sought help of government departments and took out interest-free loans.

After visiting different areas of the village, families were seen busy making these fans in an orderly fashion, and all members were participating in the process.

Female members make the fans and tie them with yarn, while male members of the house are responsible for collecting and trimming the palm leaves and selling the fans.

As soon as one enters the village, one can see fan artisans Simul Akhtar, Kajal Banu, Ayesha Begum busy making fans -- a skill passed down by their parents.

Starting from cutting and trimming the palm leaves, the fan-making process ends in a few steps. The last step in making the fan is tying everything with yarn.

Simul said she can earn Tk 100 by binding 100 fans every day.

Rashid Khalifa, 65, of the same village said to the scarcity of palm leaves, the main material for making fans.

They have to visit different areas of nearby upazilas for collecting palm leaves.

Meanwhile, seven members of Hashem's family are involved in collection, but most times, they are forced to resort to buying palm leaves and bamboo at higher prices.

His family together makes 200 to 300 fans per day. It costs them Tk 3-5 to make each fan, and they are selling it wholesale for Tk 5-7.

Halim Khalifa, another craftsman of that village, said that once a week, a wholesaler comes and buys hand-fans from the house.

Local social worker Premananda Gharami said due to financial hardship, artisans of Pakhapalli are deprived of their profits from summer season, since many artisans have to take money from lenders in winter to meet the production cost of the fans in summer.

Chairman of Chandshi Union Parishad Krishna Kant Dey said due to the increase in the price of materials, around 50 families involved in this profession have been forced to change he has been making fans for the past 25 years, their profession. Even when artisans do receive but is now facing a crisis in this profession due a profit, part of it goes to the money-lenders.

Pakistan's foreign minister will attend a meeting of the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) in India next month, his ministry said yesterday, in what will be the first visit by a top Pakistani government official to India in nearly a decade.

Relations between the nuclear-armed neighbours have been fraught for years and they have fought three wars, two of them over the Muslim-majority Himalayan region of Kashmir, which they both claim in full but rule in part.

67m children missed out on vaccines: UN

AFP, United Nations

Some 67 million children partially or fully missed routine vaccines globally between 2019 and 2021 because of lockdowns and health care disruptions caused by the Covid-19 pandemic, the United Nations said Wednesday.

"More than a decade of hard-earned gains in routine childhood immunization have been eroded," read a new report from the UN's children's agency, Unicef, adding that getting back on track "will be challenging."

Of the 67 million children whose vaccinations were "severely disrupted," 48 million missed out on routine vaccines entirely, Unicef said, flagging concerns about potential polio and measles outbreaks.

Vaccine coverage among children declined in 112 countries and the percent of children vaccinated worldwide slipped 5 points to 81 percent -- a low not seen since 2008. Africa and South Asia were particularly hard hit.

"Worryingly, the backsliding during the pandemic came at the end of a decade when, in broad terms, growth in childhood immunization had stagnated," the report

New fighting rattles Sudan's capital

Death toll rises to 300; residents stream from city, some stopped at checkpoints

AGENCIES

Residents of Sudan's capital yesterday reported renewed heavy gunfire over central Khartoum and some other areas as many tried to flee the city on the eve of the Eid holiday marking the end of the holy month of Ramadan.

Over 300 people have been killed since the fighting erupted Saturday between forces loyal to Sudan's army chief Abdel Fattah al-Burhan and his deputy, Mohamed Hamdan Daglo, who commands the paramilitary Rapid Support Forces (RSF), reports AFP.

Early yesterday, smoke and fires that had risen from the city in previous days had abated, live TV feeds over Khartoum showed, before the fighting erupted once again.

Gunfire was heard in Bahri and residents reported violent clashes west of Omdurman where they said the army had moved to block the arrival of RSF reinforcements.

Both sides said earlier they would respect a 24-hour ceasefire that was due to come into effect at 6:00 pm local time on Wednesday, but was quickly broken by renewed fighting.

The RSF issued a statement about the breakdown in the truce, saying it came under attack in Omdurman and inflicted losses on the army in response, including shooting down two helicopters.

Reuters could not independently verify the RSF's claims.

Some of the most intense fighting has been focussed around the compound housing the army HQ and the residence of Sudan's military ruler, General Abdel Fattah al-Burhan.

The army controls access to Khartoum and appeared to be trying to cut off supply routes to RSF fighters, residents and witnesses said.

International powers, struggling to evacuate citizens after the airport and several districts housing embassies were caught up in the violence, have been pushing repeatedly for truces, to little effect.

More people have been leaving the capital with most able to pass but some stopped at checkpoints, according to residents and social media posts.

"There's no food, supermarkets are empty, the situation isn't safe, honestly, so people are leaving," said Khartoum resident who gave only his first name, Abdelmalek.

The fighting has been raging since Saturday morning, cutting power and water supplies in many places during the final days of Ramadan, when Muslims fast from dawn to dusk.

The power struggle between Burhan and RSF leader General Mohamed Hamdan Dagalo, widely known as Hemedti, was triggered by an internationally-backed plan to form a new civilian government and integrate Hemedti's Rapid Support Forces (RSF) into the regular military.

Sudanese medics have warned of a catastrophic health care situation, especially in Khartoum where many hospitals were apparently caught in the crossfire.

As many as 70 percent of the hospitals in Khartoum and neighbouring states have been rendered "out of service" due to fighting, the doctors' union said.

toll was likely to be far higher, with many wounded unable to reach hospitals.

Many countries have started to make plans to evacuate thousands of foreigners, but their efforts have been put on hold by the ongoing violence.

The Sudanese army said 177 Egyptian soldiers were evacuated from the northern city of Meroe back to Egypt, which also confirmed their arrival. The RSF said later it handed over another 27 Egyptian soldiers to the Sudanese Red Cross and Cairo confirmed their arrival at the Egyptian embassy in Khartoum.

Iran 'forced' US submarine to the surface in Gulf

AFP, Tehran

Iran said yesterday it had "forced" a US submarine to surface as it was crossing the strategic Strait of Hormuz in the Gulf, a claim the Americans promptly denied.

Admiral Shahram Irani, the commander of Iran's navy, told state TV the USS Florida nuclear submarine was "approaching and passing in complete silence" when it partly entered Iranian waters.

An Iranian submarine then forced it to "surface and cross the strait", he said, adding that Tehran would raise the matter with "international authorities".

In a Twitter statement, the US Navy's Bahrainbased 5th Fleet said the claim was "absolutely false" and "represents more Iranian disinformation".

The "US 5th Fleet continues to operate wherever international law allows", it added.

Last June, the US Navy said three Iranian vessels had "interacted in an unsafe and unprofessional manner" as its ships transited the strait.

Washington-Tehran ties soured after Iran's 1979 revolution toppled shah, Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, and brought about Islamic rule under Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

REUTERS, New Delhi

An Indian court yesterday acquitted 69 Hindus, including a former minister from the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), of the murder of 11 Muslims during communal riots in the western state of Gujarat in 2002.

The killings occurred in Ahmedabad on February 28, 2002, a day after a suspected Muslim mob set fire to a train carrying Hindu pilgrims, setting off one of independent India's worst outbreaks of religious bloodshed.

A total of 86 Hindus were accused of the killings in the Naroda Gam district of Ahmedabad, 17 of whom died during trial. All the accused were free on bail.

"We have been saying from the first day that they were framed," defence lawyer Chetan Shah, who represented 82 of the accused, said. "Some of the accused were not present at the scene on the day of the incident."

Shamshad Pathan, who represented the victims, said they would challenge the court's decision in a higher court "Justice has eluded the victims once again. We will study the grounds on which the court has acquitted the accused persons," Pathan said.

Those acquitted include Maya Kodnani, a former minister of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's BJP, who was a lawmaker at the time of the riots, former Bajrang Dal leader Babu Bajrangi, and Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) leader Jaydeep Patel.

Bajrang Dal and VHP are Hindu nationalist groups and have close links to the BJP.

An Indian climber was rescued alive yesterday from one of the world's most treacherous mountains in Nepal, three days after he went missing down a crevasse.

Anurag Maloo, 34, was descending from a camp on Annapurna on Monday when he fell down a deep crevasse at an altitude of around 5,600 metres.

Chhang Dawa Sherpa of Seven Summit Treks told AFP that Maloo had fallen 300 metres down a crevasse on the 8,091-metre (26,545-foot) mountain and had been lifted out by a team of eight people.

"His condition was critical and he has been airlifted to a Pokhara hospital for treatment," he added, referring to a nearby city.

Annapurna, the world's tenth highest mountain, is avalanche-prone, technically difficult and has a higher death rate than Everest.

Have a safe and joyous Eid

Eid comes at an uncertain time, but together we can forge ahead

It is that time of year again, a time that brings to an end a month of fasting, spiritual dedication and reflection. A time that brings communities and entire countries together. A time of feasts and family bonding. As we prepare to embrace this moment - Eid-ul-Fitr will be observed either on Saturday or Sunday, depending on Shawwal moon sighting - things are falling into a predictable pattern. To celebrate Eid with their loved ones, tens of thousands of people have already left Dhaka on trains, buses, and launches. Reportedly, it has been mostly hassle-free so far, although, in the mad rush for home, some gridlock is to be expected along with some trouble getting tickets. We hope that all this will be kept to a minimum, and relevant government agencies will do their job properly.

This Eid, however, comes under less-than-ideal circumstances. Long-held concerns over high food prices have remained unaddressed, or ignored, causing suffering for a vast majority of the population. For Dhaka-based traders, the situation has been particularly grim. Although shopping markets are drawing heavy footfalls, the effect of the devastating fires in two popular markets for retail or lowend customers will cast a long shadow over the community. The incidents in Bangabazar and New Super Market – coming within the space of 11 days - together damaged about 4,000 shops. And like in past years, many workers in the garments sector will go back home without wages or Eid bonuses. According to an estimate, as of Wednesday, over 32 percent of RMG factories in seven industrial zones - including in Ashulia, Gazipur, Narayanganj, and Chattogram - are yet to pay bonuses to their workers.

These issues and others may ruin the festive mood for poor households and those with fixed income. Every Eid in Bangladesh also comes with the additional threat of precious lives being lost in road crashes. There is an irony in the fact that we talk about people streaming out of the capital without hassle, as they did last year too, only for us to be likely slapped with a long list of crash victims at the end of the holiday. Historically, Eids are when most road crashes occur. Last year, for example, highway travels during the extended Eid-ul-Fitr holiday between April 25 and May 8 resulted in the deaths of 376 people. With the relevant authorities still in a state of denial about the true extent of danger on our roads, one cannot help but worry if the same scenario will be repeated this time. We urge the authorities to take all measures necessary to ensure the safety of travellers.

Heading into the Eid holiday, however, we want to focus more on the brighter side of things as well as the lessons of the holy month that we can hopefully carry forward. As a nation, the lesson that will most benefit us is that of giving generously (to those in need of help) and of working together for the greater good of society. We wish everyone a safe and joyous Eid. Eid Mubarak!

Don't criminalise free thought

Withdraw suspension of Salina Shelley, repeal DSA

We are alarmed by the extent to which intolerance has been institutionalised in the country, severely curtailing people's right to free speech. The latest victim to have paid a price for expressing an opinion – a satire, for that matter – is Salina Akhter Shelley, poet and acting principal of Chattogram Port Authority Women's College. The Chittagong Port Authority (CPA) suspended Selina on April 16, alleging that her Facebook status on the Arabic word Ramadan had "hurt" religious sentiments, and that such an act was punishable under the Digital Security Act (DSA). Five years since the infamous DSA was passed, we are still at a loss to understand what exactly constitutes "hurting" of religious sentiments, who is entitled to have hurt sentiments, and how one can objectively judge such a feeling.

By now, we have shouted ourselves hoarse over the various ways in which the vague provisions in the DSA have been misused to target human rights defenders, opposition activists, journalists, writers, cartoonists, etc. The list of who can be a target of the DSA – and the scope of what constitutes an offence – keeps on increasing by the day, so much so that any slightly critical or creative thought can be (mis)interpreted as offensive. Its broad and ambiguous provisions have created a culture of fear, forcing people to self-censor their opinions. For how long will this draconian law – which has no place in a country that professes to be democratic - dictate our thoughts?

After defending the law for the first three years of its enactment, the law minister in December 2021 admitted that it had been "abused in certain cases", adding that a six-member team had been formed to address some of the concerns raised nationally and internationally. In February 2022, he claimed that the UN had given some suggestions to the committee. which they were looking into. But then, the relevant UN offices told The Daily Star that no such committee had been in touch with them in the two years since the minister announced its formation. Does it mean that all the talk of addressing concerns about DSA was just a charade?

On March 31, United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Türk called for an immediate suspension of the DSA until necessary amendments were made, including repealing two sections and amending eight others. We are alarmed that far from delivering on his lofty promises of reform, the law minister rejected the possibility of repealing the two sections flagged by the OHCHR, and stated in no uncertain terms that the DSA was here to stay.

The government's reluctance to amend or repeal the DSA is an ominous sign, particularly as the national elections approach. What's equally concerning is that thought policing, popularised by the DSA, now seems to have spread across the country, with different institutions taking it upon themselves to criminalise diversity of thought, as evidenced by the case against Salina. We urge the authorities to withdraw the suspension against her, and stop criminalisation of freethinking by any means.

However, the project members chose to collect and publish documents related to the war instead. The reason they cited for this decision was the difficulty of "maintaining impartiality and objectivity and avoiding the possibility of distortion" in writing about a contemporary event, particularly a "revolutionary event" like the Liberation War. They were aware of the diversity of experiences during the war and wanted to ensure the representation of multiple perspectives.

The project was headed by famous litterateur and journalist Hasan Hafizur Rahman, and the authentication committee of the project included famous historians and educationists of Bangladesh, including Prof Mafizullah Kabir, Prof Salahuddin Ahmed, and Prof Anisuzzaman.

The publication of the documents was a great service to the nation. Most importantly, they set a standard and provided a guiding spirit for future research on the war. These values have become increasingly relevant in Bangladesh, particularly in light of recent events such as the removal of renowned academician Prof Imtiaz Ahmed from his position as the director of Dhaka University's Centre for Genocide Studies (CGS). This action was taken following a propaganda campaign against his book Historicizing 1971 Genocide: State versus Person, which was published in 2009. Interestingly, one of the campaigners, Sheikh Hafizur Rahman Karzon, has been appointed as the new director of CGS.

The most shocking aspect was the statement released by the Dhaka University Teachers' Association (DUTA). It is disconcerting to think Association about the future of intellectual freedom in Dhaka University.

For the sake of reason, I must ask: if these teachers are truly concerned about the history of the genocide or the Liberation War, why have they remained silent for nearly 13 years since the publication of Prof Imtiaz Ahmed's book?

Constructive criticism with honest intent can enrich our understanding of history. However, the recent intolerance towards different perspectives and the vilification of an author with charges of sedition are unacceptable and go against the values of our Liberation War.

We must not forget that the seed of the 1971 genocide was intolerance.

The lack of protest against this undemocratic move is also concerning. The reactions I found on social media were mostly defeatist. Some see it as a conflict within various factions of the ruling party, while others have criticised Prof Ahmed's previous comments that align with the government's stance, particularly his remark following the US-imposed sanctions against Rab, in which he said

Although decades have passed since the publication of these valuable volumes of our history, the rest of the documents from their collection remain unpublished. To my knowledge, many of these documents are now gathering dust in the collection of the National Museum.

How will our climate budget

Dr Haseeb Md Irfanullah is an independent consultant working on environment, climate change, and research systems

HASEEB MD IRFANULLAH

Two facts related to climate-relevant funding in Bangladesh fascinate me. First, between 2015-16 and 2022-23 fiscal years, Bangladesh allocated 7.26-8.1 percent of its annual national budget as climate budget, which is 0.7-0.8 percent of the national GDP. Second, 18 years ago, the National Adaptation Programme of Action (NAPA) estimated to invest $73.5 million in climate change adaptation over the following few years. But such strategic planning magnified manyfold in October 2022, when the government approved the National Adaptation Plan, 2023-2050 (NAP2050), targeting to spend $230 billion over the next three decades.

Since the government is now preparing its annual national budget for FY2023-24, what changes can we expect to see in the climate-relevant allocations, post-NAP2050? I think we can expect three specific achievable changes in the forthcoming climate budget. First, in the current fiscal year, with a total climate budget of Tk 30,500 crore, the three ministries or divisions (out of 25) with the highest climate allocations are Ministry of Agriculture (Tk 8,667 crore), Local Government Division (Tk 3,768 crore), and Ministry of Water Resources (Tk 3,484 crore). In addition, the climate budget also shows allocations against six thematic areas of the Bangladesh Strategy and Climate Change Action Plan, 2009. Here, the highest allocation is made to food security, social protection, and health (41.87 percent), followed by infrastructure (27.78 percent), mitigation and lowcarbon development (13.36 percent), comprehensive disaster management (7.21 percent), capacity-building and institutional strengthening (6.71 percent), and research and knowledge management (3.07 percent). These thematic allocations broadly match the ministerial allocations.

In the FY2023-24 budget, we also need to see the geographical distribution of the climate allocations. The NAP2050 contains the latest climate vulnerability maps of Bangladesh considering a wide range of shocks (e.g. cyclones and floods) and stresses (e.g. rise of sea level and salinity intrusion), prepared by the Center for Environmental and Geographic Information Services (CEGIS). The CEGIS can help the Finance Division to prepare maps combining climate fund allocations against the degree of climate vulnerability. These maps should carry information down to the upazila level, if union-level information is not available for now. We indeed need to know how much money is going to Dhaka and how much to Dacope (Khulna), Derai (Sunamganj) or Dimla (Nilphamari).

Second, in the forthcoming climate budget, a separate section should be added on investments to be made in nature-based solutions (NbS) to tackle climate change. Here, NbS means to protect, restore, create, and manage aquatic and terrestrial ecosystems to adapt to climate change impacts as well as reduce carbon dioxide in current annual gap of $700 billion. the air, while increasing the local biodiversity. Focusing on NbS has two specific rationales. First, the NAP2050 has already included NbS as one of its six main goals. Second, unlike climate finance, our conservation finance is poorly defined and is essentially made of project-based, short-term investments.

The Ministry of Environment, Forest

By incorporating allocations for naturebased solutions into Bangladesh's climate budget, we can essentially bring together financing of two biggest crises of our times: climate emergency and biodiversity loss. The environment ministry should work with the finance authorities to develop a tool to collate investments in NbS by different government agencies every year.

and Climate Change and its concerned departments are showing low interest in sustainable conservation financing. Therefore, we are not going to see much progress in establishing new funds as outlined in the Ecologically Critical Area Management Rules, 2016, the Protected Area Management Rules, 2017, and the Bangladesh Biodiversity Act, 2017 any time soon. But the Kunming-Montreal Global Biodiversity Framework, agreed upon by 188 countries in December 2022 in a global biodiversity meeting in Montreal, Canada, emphasises conservation finance to minimise the

By incorporating NbS allocations into Bangladesh's climate budget, we can essentially bring together financing of two biggest crises of our times: climate emergency and biodiversity loss. The environment ministry should work with the finance authorities to develop a tool to collate investments in NbS by different government agencies every year. Our experience of preparing climate budgets should be useful here.

Over the last two years, Bangladesh has developed two climate-related investment plans: the draft Mujib Climate Prosperity Plan 2030 (MCPP2030) and the NAP2050. The climate budget for FY24 should track how many of these financial targets have been achieved or have received commitments from donors and development partners. If we look into the NAP2050, about 72.5 percent of the $230 billion fund has to be invested by 2040. This means the country needs to triple its current yearly investment, which now stands just above $3 billion.

In 2016, with FAO and USAID, the environment ministry prepared the Bangladesh Country Investment Plan for Environment, Forestry and Climate Change (EFCC-CIP). This CIP was supposed to be accompanied by a monitoring mechanism to track investments in these sectors until 2021, but it didn't work out. Based on past experience, the ministry and FAO can work with the finance authorities to develop a monitoring and reporting tool to track investments to implement the NAP2050.

The NAP2050 is an ambitious plan with 113 priority actions in crucial sectors ranging from water, disaster management, agriculture, nature conservation and urban, to policy, institution, capacity-building and research. If the NAP2050 can't make us rethink the way we prepare our climate budget, that will be a missed opportunity.

Zafrullah: Tribute to a freedom fighter and revolutionary

Policy Dialogue (CPD).

REHMAN SOBHAN

Zafrullah Chowdhury's passing, we have interred one of the few genuine social revolutionaries visible in Bangladesh's public domain. Zafrullah was indeed a frontline freedom fighter and was universally recognised as such. He did not participate in the war remotely, through campaigning abroad for our liberation, as many of us did. Such campaigns did valuable service to the course of the war, but is not comparable to travelling from London to Agartala, setting up a field hospital from scratch, on the front line of the war zone, and working round the clock to tend to the wounded and sick. He and his colleagues enabled the injured to return to the battlefield.

I do not know of too many people who actually gave up their lifestyles abroad to immediately join the Liberation War. Quite a number, such as Fazle Hasan Abed and Muhammad Yunus, did return to Bangladesh from committed themselves to a life of service to the dukhi manush, as did Zafrullah and many others. For this class of young men and women, the Liberation War had a life-changing impact and inspired them to give up more conventional lives committed to professional advancement commensurate with their education and class. Yunus and Abed moved away from their projected career paths to build world famous organisations, which served to improve the lives of millions of people not just in Bangladesh, but around the world. Other such social entrepreneurs have played an important role in writing Bangladesh's globally recognised success story of reducing poverty and promoting the human development of its people.

Zafrullah always remained anchored in Bangladesh. His point of departure lay in the revolutionary nature of his consciousness and actions. This was manifested in his decision to abandon his quest for a possible FRCS, the dream of every aspirant Bangalee medical practitioner, just a few weeks before his final exam – his decision to abandon his Pakistani nationality and to publicly tear up his passport, and his decision to join the Liberation War as a soldier. When he reached Kolkata, he did not linger there and join his many compatriots taking refuge there, but immediately moved to Tripura on the front line of the battlefield and decided to set up a field hospital. Presumably, studying for an FRCS does not educate anyone about how to set up a battlefield hospital with limited resources at hand or few experienced personnel available to him. Such a bold, risk-prone involvement, for a young man, required a revolutionary consciousness where you decide to do things that no one has thought of, and to do so for the first time.

Zafrullah's move to set up Gonoshasthaya Kendra in Savar was itself based on a revolutionary conception. I suspect that Zafrullah was inspired by ideas drawn from the Chinese Revolution led by Mao, which in its early years sought to provide health for all, using limited resources, socially appropriate technology, and the use of so-called "barefoot doctors" – medical practitioners with limited education from the grass roots, who could be provided with basic training to take care of the most frequently recurring medical problems of ordinary people. Zafrullah's further revolutionary act was to engage the working people of Savar in taking care of their own health problems by investing in low-cost preventative care. Such care was mostly provided by the revolutionary act of bringing young village girls out of the seclusion of their homes, training them to work as healthcare providers, and eventually drawing them into a variety of other non-traditional activities such as riding bicycles, driving cars, working with machinery, and serving as security guards. All such activities by women are more commonplace now. But in the 1970s, these were social revolutionary acts, more so than microfinance, which was built around helping women to generate income working from the seclusion of their homes. By the end of the 1970s, the Gonoshasthaya women were ubiquitous across the landscape of Savar, engaged in work that was once inconceivable for any

To build a cadre of "barefoot" healthcare providers required a revolutionary approach to medical education. Zafrullah believed – and I remember him explaining this on various public platforms and to me personally – that the courses training medical students for the MBBS degree were inappropriate and not costeffective for serving the health needs of the majority of the then low-income population, who mostly lived in the rural

He argued that more elaborate training must indeed go on to meet the needs of patients with more complicated diseases and illnesses. But for the more commonplace illnesses suffered by a great majority of people such as fevers, low-grade infections, diarrhoeal diseases, simple injuries and the need for preventive care, a much shorter, more serviceable training programme would be cost-effective and could be completed in a thereby saved lives and, in many cases, much shorter time, which could produce large numbers of doctors/caregivers/ nurses to meet the immediate needs of people. Moreover, such "graduates" would likely be more willing and able to live in the rural areas to service those most in need of affordable care. In contrast, five-year MBBS degrees produce a much smaller crop of caregivers whose graduates, in abroad immediately after liberation and most cases, are less inclined to live and serve in the rural areas and spend their time and energy doing tadbir with the health ministry officials to be transferred to the metropolitan centres. It was

CEOs and managers who thereby locally incorporated companies such as Renata, Eskayef, and ACI, now at the vanguard of Bangladesh's thriving pharma industry that today meets 90 percent of our needs for medication and is one of our most promising export industries.

The drug policy and its outcome provide an excellent example of the positive outcome of economic nationalism. Zafrullah's revolutionary consciousness was demonstrated by his vision and courage to take on one of the biggest sources of FDI in Bangladesh at the time, and to persuade a regime not known for its strong commitment to nationalism to stay the course in the face of much pressure from the Western countries, from where the MNCs originated.

At the end of the day, Zafrullah's revolutionary vision had, at best, a limited impact. Its social reach did not go much beyond Savar, and its achievements at the national level remain limited to the drug policy. His ideas on reforming medical education did not go far due to the resolute resistance of the BMA against his non-traditional ideas. His initiative to use Bangladeshi scientific expertise to develop a low-cost rapid testing kit for Covid infections was rejected by the health ministry, though such kits came to be widely produced abroad and are in regular use in Bangladesh through imports.

In his later years, even when his health was failing, he engaged himself in a variety of causes where he believed the values that had informed the liberation struggle to be endangered. In a political climate where public reasoning is itself

ILLUSTRATION: REHNUMA PROSHOON

Zafrullah's ideas on medical education which first attracted the wrath of the BMA and presumably many doctors with an MBBS. But he went on arguing about this to the end and eventually set up Gono University to give substance to his ideas.

His views on the pharmaceutical industry were also radical for its time. remember around the early 1980s Zafrullah educating me to the fact that the MNCs who then monopolised the pharmaceutical industry marketed brand name medications at high prices, where their generics could be produced locally at lower costs. When he finally persuaded Gen Ershad to set new ground rules for banning branded medicines where generic alternatives were available, this was criticised and resisted by much of the pharmaceutical industry in Bangladesh, but particularly by the MNCs. Fortunately, the then government held firm and a large number of much favoured brandname drugs, in popular use, were banned. The ban eventually led to an exodus from Bangladesh of most of the MNCs such as Pfizer, ICI, and Glaxo.

The good news was that, as predicted by Zafrullah, when he argued his case with Ershad for the drug policy reforms, the ban provided a great stimulus to the development of local pharmaceutical companies such as Square and Beximco. These ventures were given a quantum boost in their business fortunes when the MNCs vacated the local market for pharmaceutical products, leaving the field open for local companies. The further bonus came when the departing MNCs sold, on favourable terms, their production facilities, goodwill and, most important, their technological and managerial expertise, to their Bangladeshi in retreat, his gestures remained largely rhetorical but projected his indomitable spirit and courage.

Many people talk or argue for revolution. A smaller number are members of political parties that proclaim social revolution as part of their ideologies. For all of this class, their revolution remains largely aspirational since they have had little or no opportunity to demonstrate what a social revolution would amount to in practice. Zafrullah, who always proclaimed himself to be a socialist, believed that incremental change was not enough and that the social order itself needed to be changed. He could never do this on his own since such a move demanded political engagement and the emergence of necessary objective conditions. Instead, he attempted through his programmes at Gonoshasthaya Kendra to demonstrate what a "socialist" health system - relevant to the needs of the masses - might look like. He explored in real life what empowerment of the deprived through a social and gender revolution may demand. He was sufficiently successful in demonstrating his ideas on the ground in Savar, enough to occasionally arouse the wrath and resistance of local elites and fundamentalist forces.

In his own life, he lived simply, owned no property, and remained accessible to all people - particularly the dispossessed, to whom he was perceived not as a Neta, but as a Bhai.

May his life inspire those, particularly the young - who continue to believe in social revolution but are discouraged by the formidable obstacles that lie before them – to move along the path blazed by Zafrullah.

The futility of fussing over age

NO STRINGS ATTACHED

AASHA MEHREEN AMIN

It's always a bit of a jolt when one is reminded of one's age. Sometimes it comes as an unintentional backhanded compliment: "Apa you have 'preserved' yourself well," which may make you feel like a jar of onion pickle floating in a pool of mustard oil. At other times, it may be brutally honest and, again, well-intentioned, "Apa, the fact is this city is not made for old people; old people in this country should migrate to countries that are elderlyfriendly.'

Well, you kind of asked for it when you were complaining about the sloping footbridge that gives you the jitters because of your rickety knees.

But the fact is that there is no way of getting out of this constant message that you are considered kind of a "marvel" just for being able to stand and not crumble to the floor.

Of course it's all about perspective. When you were 12, your 16-year-old brother seemed like a real grown-up, and you were struck by his coolness for having the gumption to refuse haircuts and defy parental or school authorities, not caring about the dire consequences. When you were 16, you couldn't wait till you were 18, ready to enter the haloed gates of university the Disney World of teenage fantasies where the possibility of being able to "study" hundreds of members of the opposite sex would make your head swim.

This perverse obsession with wanting to grow up fast - to partake in what seemed to be the perfect montage of life's most glorious moments lasts till one reaches 25, when suddenly it does an about-turn. The fear of turning 30 and being on the precipice of "oldness" can ruin one's 20s, which honestly speaking IS the best time of your life - although, as we have earlier established, it's all subjective. People in their 50s and 60s, for instance, wistfully remember their 40s, the pre-pubescence of old age when their midlife crises led to all kinds of silliness - wearing ripped jeans to look like a teenager and horribly failing, hanging out with 20-somethings to be part of "the gang," sporting psychedelic eyeshadow colours, and so on.

The 50s are possibly the most tumultuous years when you are forced to come to terms with the inevitable decline of all that you took for granted hair, smooth skin, sturdy bones, patience, and the general urge to be spontaneous and adventurous. It is also the time when one develops an affinity for any product that has "anti" as a prefix. Hence, the rows of anti-ageing serums, anti-hair loss shampoos, anti-greying dye, antioxidants, antidepressants, antibiotics, and so on. It is almost like reliving puberty with the hormones going haywire (though with totally different outcomes), the feeling of being misunderstood and on short fuse all the time. It is a time when you really do feel like you are about to implode with rage at the sheer unfairness of it all, and also because SOMEONE DID NOT SWITCH OFF THE NIGHTLIGHT IN THE VERANDA EVEN AT 5AM!

It will also mean struggling to keep up with the sonic pace of technology so that, by the time you have kind of accepted that everything is saved "in the cloud," some smart Alec will tell you to AirDrop your files to their phone! You must also learn how to make your post "public" on Facebook and NOT send unicorn emojis to your boss when you text.

After the torment of the 50s, there is far more clarity in life. You will know for sure that the number of multi-coloured pills on your bedside table will keep on increasing, and your holidays abroad will fall under "medical tourism." You will be able to guess just how much your blood sugar level will shoot up if you have the extra jilapi after dinner, and how your BP will soar if you stay up till 2am binge-watching your favourite Netflix series.

The best part is that it will no longer sting when the references to your twilight years are pointed out. In fact, it is a kind of superpower, this senior citizenship, providing you with incredible allowances – the privilege to be cranky at any given time, exemption from all kinds of heavy lifting, the entitlement of the best seat in the living room, the pure joy of having grandchildren to cuddle (but not see through college), being fed first, and getting away with all kinds of offending remarks that will be condoned as a quirk of ageing.

The lesson, therefore, is to relish your age no matter what number it represents. Every age comes with its own set of challenges, but it also brings in new and interesting experiences that make life so mysterious and wondrous. So embrace your age with love and pride, smile triumphantly - toothless

The Fiduciary Obligation Delusion in Syndicated Loan Agreements

SULTANA MUMTAZ

Last year, Eastern Bank Limited arranged a loan syndication worth BDT 1.200 crore for Banglalink Digital Communications Limited. Such Facilities are becoming increasingly popular in the country since it plays a huge role in reducing the exposure level of a lender through distributing the risk amongst various lenders. In Bangladesh, syndicated loan facilities are governed according to the Law of Contract as well as the directions issued by Bangladesh Bank from time to time. Moreover, its recovery is presumably to be governed by the Artha Rin Adalat Ain, 2003. However, an important question which deserves to be explored is to what extent equity comes into play in governing the roles of the banks engaged in such facility, specifically, the arranging bank and the agent bank.

In a syndicated loan facility, the arranging bank and the agent bank perform contrasting duties since the role of one begins only when another's comes to an end. However, when it comes to fiduciary duties, the position in English Law (which is a persuasive authority for Bangladesh) is quite the same. The arranging bank in a syndicated loan facility is the bank which puts together the loan upon receiving the mandate from the borrower.

Zakrzewski & Fuller in McKnight and Zakrzewski on The Law of Loan Agreements and Syndicated Lending (OUP, 2019) describes the duties of the arranging bank to be threefold, namely, (a) helping the borrower in putting together the information memorandum which compiles the necessary information for the lenders to assess whether to lend or not, (b) using its reasonable (or best) endeavours to obtain the agreement of different lenders to participate in the loan, and lastly, (c) to prepare the facility document.

In contrast, they describe the Agent bank as the "facility agent ... coordinator of the facility once it has been formalised by the signing of the documentation. Its role begins upon execution of the facility resigns and is replaced by another agent, until the conclusion of the transaction". The agent bank is appointed by the lenders to act as their agent and the appointment is not revocable by individual lenders in respect of themselves (Redwood Master Fund Ltd v TD Bank Europe Ltd [2002] EWHC 2703 (Ch)).

Fiduciary obligation of arranging bank

L. Gullifer & J. Payne in Corporate Finance Principles and Policy (2nd ed, 2015) outline that whether an arranging bank owes a fiduciary duty has two aspects to it. First, whether it owes a fiduciary duty to anyone and the second is to whom and when? According to them, it is impossible to owe a fiduciary duty to two parties negotiating with each other and it is very difficult "to pinpoint a time when the duties of the arranger shift from the borrower to the lender". Hence, referring to other scholarly authorities, they opine that the best solution is that the arranging bank does not owe a fiduciary duty. The only authority suggesting that the arranging bank may owe a fiduciary duty is the case of UBAF Ltd v European American Banking Corp [1984] QB 713.

However, both Zakrzewski & Fuller and agreement and will continue, unless it L. Gullifer & J. Payne suggest that in the [1913] 2 KB 515, it is also evident that not at Tanjib Alam and Associates.

PHOTO COURTESY: THE BUSINESS STANDARD concerned case, the duty might have been owed as the security trustee, rather than the arranger. In this regard L. Gullifer & J. Payne highlights two more key aspects to arranging bank owing a fiduciary duty which are: (i) such duties are likely to be expressly excluded in the mandate letter (Barclays Bank Plc v Svizera Holdings BV [2014] EWHC 1020 (Comm) [15]) and (ii) the borrower is usually in the position of a customer of the bank, and no fiduciary duties are owed by a bank to its customer (JP Morgan Chase Bank v Springwell Navigation Corp [2008] EWHC 1186

Fiduciary obligation of agent bank

(Comm) [573].

In the case of agent bank in syndicated loan facilities, although the probability of owing fiduciary duty may be more than the arranging bank, it is well within the capacity of the parties to exclude any such duty through their contracts. Again, the starting position would be UBAF Ltd v European American Banking Corp [1984] QB 713 as the authority, however, Zakrzewski & Fuller have expressed their doubts as to whether such duty would be owed by virtue of being an agent rather than a security trustee.

every agent will be held to be in a fiduciary position. Moreover, Zakrzewski & Fuller argue that as per Torre Asset Funding v RBS [2013] EWHC 2670 (Ch) "it is possible (specially in a commercial context) for the nature and scope of the duties of a fiduciary to be restrictively defined and modified or even excluded by contract" with the exception of situations which involves dishonesty or lack of good faith on the part of the fiduciary as provided in Armitage v Nurse [1998] Ch 241. Further relying on the case of Torre Asset Funding, Zakrzewski & Fuller opined that it is common practice that the syndicated loan facility will expressly preclude any fiduciary obligation on part of the agent bank towards lenders or anyone else and contain such provision that would overcome any fiduciary duties which might otherwise arise or might be implied from the role which the agent bank plays.

Therefore, it is quite evident that the parties to a syndicated loan facility can successfully avoid any liability which may arise out of fiduciary obligations owed as an arranging bank and agent bank through meticulously drafted documentation. However, even if the documentation does not sufficiently protect the parties against such liability, the chances of courts implying such a duty are quite narrow.

The Mobile Court Act, 2009 has elaborately discussed the definition, function, procedure, and power of the mobile courts. This Act empowers executive magistrates to take into cognizance and try offences instantly.

Section 7 of the Act states that punishment may be conferred on the basis of confession. If the accused does not confess, the magistrate may either discharge him or refer the case to the appropriate court. Again, the executive magistrate is empowered to punish a person when the offence has been committed in his presence while conducting the Court.

QUERY:

I am a 19-year-old female student studying at a reputed college in Tangail. Recently, I have seen on Facebook that someone is repeatedly creating a fake profile using my name and photos to annoy me and spread rumors about me. Whenever my friends and I report the account to Facebook to take it down, a new account reemerges. Is there any legal action that I can take now?

Parul (not real name), Tangail

RESPONSE:

Thank you for your query. I am very sorry to hear that you have been going through such a situation and I sympathise with you. The situation you are in is commonly referred to as cyber-bullying. Bullying of any type can have detrimental effects on the victim, regardless of the fact that such an issue is often ignored or taken lightly by our society. Moreover, the effects of bullying are not just instant, the trauma resulting from it can last for a long time.

Cyber-bullying falls under umbrella of cyber-crime. The term cyber-crime refers to crimes committed in cyber-space. Hence, to simplify, cyber-bullying means any act committed against another person via the usage of electronic communication, e.g., social media. Sending threatening messages online, sharing private or profiles, spreading rumours and so on, are all examples of cyber-bullying. In short, any act of bullying in cyber-space constitutes cyber-bullying.

With an increasing number of users on social media platforms, cyberbullying has been increasing every day. Although most victims of cyberbullying are students and young people, others such as employers, teachers, and employees, etc. also face such issues. Nonetheless, to clarify, cyber-bullying is not just an act that is frowned upon, rather it is an offence punishable under the Information and Communication Technology Act, 2006, and the Digital Security Act, 2018. These Acts tell us that any person who publishes fake, obscene, or defamatory content against a person, or the State or violates any religious view, such a person shall be deemed to have committed and be guilty of an offence, which is punishable. The punishment for such an offence is fine and imprisonment.

Cyber-crime victims can file a complaint against the perpetrator to the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Commission (BTRC) by calling the number: +88029611111 or, sending an email to btrc@btrc.gov.bd. An action would be taken by the BTRC within 24 hours, and the perpetrator shall be brought to justice within 3 days of filing the complaint. The government has also introduced a cyber-crime helpline +88-02-55007183. Victims can now call the number to submit their Furthermore, in case the harassment amounts to criminal intimidation (threatening a person to harm him, his property, his reputation, etc.), the person shall also be liable under the Penal Code 1860. If the gravity of the offence results in what is more than just mere bullying, the aforementioned statute should definitely be resorted to.

On the contrary, the initial internal steps of reporting, blocking, etc. should be implemented before moving on to the complaining stage.

I hope the information I provided will help you find a solution to your problem.

King of Clay in 'difficult situation'

REUTERS, Madrid

Rafa Nadal will miss next week's Madrid Open after a setback in his recovery from a hip injury sustained at the Australian Open in January, the 22-times major champion said on Nadal skipped tournaments at Indian Wells, Miami and Monte Carlo as well as the current Barcelona Open after suffering the injury that effectively ended his Melbourne Park title defence as he fell to a second-round defeat by Mackenzie McDonald.

"Initially it had to be a six to eight week recovery period and we are now on fourteen. "The reality is that the situation is not what we would have expected, " Nadal said in a video published on his social media

While the Spaniard, also known as King of Clay, a 14-times French Open champion who has dominated the clay court season for years, still hopes to be fully fit for the Grand Slam starting in May, his statement is not optimistic.

"The injury still hasn't healed and I can't work out what I need to compete," Nadal said.

'Hope to see Kane statue outside Spurs stadium'

AFP, London

Tottenham chairman Daniel Levy says Harry Kane can still fulfil his ambition of winning a trophy with the club but believes being a "legend" is also important.

The England captain has scored 23 Premier League goals this season behind only Manchester City's Erling Haaland -- but is approaching the final 12 months of his contract at managerless Spurs.

The 29-year-old forward, who has been linked with a move to Manchester United or Paris Saint-Germain at the end of the season, has spent his whole senior career at Tottenham but is yet to win a trophy.

Spurs' record goalscorer has often made clear his desire to win silverware at his boyhood club but discussions over a new deal are yet to take place.

Levy said during a discussion at the Cambridge Union Society: "He (Kane) can absolutely win a trophy at Spurs, but being a legend is also important. "The fact that he's the top scorer for Tottenham, he's making history. I hope one day there is a statue of Harry Kane outside our stadium."

Long-serving chairman Levy is known for his reluctance to take part in media activities and has rarely given interviews during his 22 years at Spurs since ENIC bought the club.

The Tottenham fan reflected on a number of issues during the event in Cambridge last month, including the club's trophy drought, which has now extended into a 15th consecutive Erling Haaland compensated for missing from the spot in the first half as he lashed one past the Bayern Munich goalkeeper for his 48th goal in 41 appearances this season to help Manchester City draw 1-1 in the Champions League quarterfinal second leg at the Allianz Arena, and secure a 4-1 win on aggregate, on Wednesday.

Fans await thrilling semifinals

Whilst drama remained in Tuesday's quarterfinal ties in the Champions League, few expected any sort of comebacks from the teams trailing when Wednesday night's second legs began.

A 4-1 win on aggregate for Manchester City over Bayern Munich and Inter Milan's 5-3 aggregate victory against Benfica now only see fans, even neutrals, spend days in anticipation of what promises to be a blockbuster series of Champions League semifinals next month.

With revenge on mind, Erling Haaland, who once again was on the scoresheet during their 1-1 draw in the quarterfinal second leg at the Allianz Arena yesterday, and Manchester City will take on defending champions Real Madrid in one semifinal while the Milan derby will return to the centre stage of European football when the Italian city's two giant clubs - AC Milan and Inter Milan – meet in the other fiery Champions League semifinal.

CAN CITY GET REVENGE?

A year ago Manchester City suffered one of the most heartbreaking European defeats in their history against Real Madrid - but now they have the chance of revenge.

For the second season in a row, and third overall, City and Real have been drawn against each other in the Champions League semifinals.

Last year City went till the 85th minute of the second leg at the Bernabeu just needing to not concede two goals, only to do so in dramatic fashion.

Having won a thrilling first leg 4-3 at Etihad Stadium, Riyad Mahrez gave City a 5-3 aggregate lead.

But substitute Rodrygo netted in the 90th and 91st minutes, with Real's first two shots on target.

Karim Benzema then scored an extratime winner from the penalty spot to seal a stunning 6-5 aggregate triumph - and Carlo Ancelotti's side went on to beat Liverpool in the final.

But is there is a real feeling things could be different this year – especially with 48goal striker Erling Haaland in their ranks.

"All clubs know if you want to win the Champions League you need to beat Real Madrid," said City boss Pep Guardiola, who once managed Real's arch-rivals Barcelona.

Real have won 14 European Cups, twice as many as anybody else - including five of the past nine.

"Hopefully yes!" said City midfielder Bernardo Silva when asked about the chance of exacting revenge against the holders on 9 and 17 May, with the second leg at home.

"We will go for it definitely. We always go for it, but we feel the team is very, very confident at the minute. I think we are going through."

FIERY MILAN DERBY IN STORE

Meanwhile, the prospect of the two matches full of colour and pageantry between local rivals Inter and AC Milan, who between them have been crowned kings of Europe 10 times, will dominate discussion in Milan, and remind fans when Italian football had a legitimate claim to call itself the world's best.

Before the draw for the 2005 Champions quarterfinals, former AC Milan managing director Adriano Galliani was desperate to not be drawn with another Italian team.

"Above all I don't want Inter because for those of us who live in Milan it would be neil," ne said.

In the end Galliani's wish was not granted and that year's last eight was the scene of possibly the most notorious derby of all, with Inter fans throwing barrage of flares onto the pitch, one which took on a hellish landscape in the second leg after Milan won the first 2-0.

A footballing epoch has passed since those days, with both Milan clubs spending years in the doldrums at home and abroad until they won the two most recent Serie A titles between them.

"For us, this derby is a chance of revenge, a revenge of history and revenge also for last year," said Inter chairman Steven Zhang after Wednesday's straightforward passage past Benfica.

Mustafizur's struggles stemming from lack of red-ball perseverance

SPORTS REPORTER

England's Moeen Ali made his debut in 2014, a year before Bangladesh pacer Mustafizur Rahman. One similarity is that neither have been playing Test cricket, but the differences in their thought process is an important aspect in Bangladesh's pace-bowling department.

The difference is that Moeen was starting to feel the lack of Test cricket affecting his white-ball cricket. Moeen felt he was missing rhythm with

"When I was playing Test matches, I always felt like I was bowling well in white-ball cricket. You can kind of lose that rhythm, I guess. I think I've got to have that mindset of still bowling with that same energy as I would have done in Test matches,' Moeen recently said in an interview with Cricinfo.

Moeen is a veteran of 63 Tests compared to Mustafizur's 15 Tests. Pitches for home Test had rendered pace bowlers as souvenirs and, in that regard, Mustafizur's motivation has always been white-ball cricket, with just 36 first-class games under his belt.

The question can always be pondered why a white-ball specialist needs longer-version cricket. Talking to Nazmul Abedin Faheem, > analyst and mentor to many national team stars, shed some light.

"Test batters gives and bowlers an opportunity to play their own way and understand their own strengths and weaknesses. In T20 format, you don't play your own game, the scoreboard dictates," he said.

The analytical side of Fizz's game merits reconsideration given the two length deliveries in his last IPL game, which allowed batters to get under them at a very crucial stage. It appeared he could be targeted when opposition required it. "I don't know if he [Mustafizur] has a clear head about his own game. He is probably depending on what others tell him. It's not about his cutters or slowers but his understanding and reading of the game. There is the thing about 'what am I not supposed to do?'. That's probably in his head. Does that stem from a negative mindset? "Yes," Fahim says. "You are thinking you won't bowl loose deliveries or half-volleys or wides. But negative thoughts don't bring positive results. Maybe he's thinking he won't give away runs but it's very difficult since in T20s without aggressive intent since everyone gets hit. He has to back himself and he isn't doing that.

"We used to think of him as an automatic choice in T20s but that's not the case anymore. We have four to five bowlers who come before Mustafizur," Fahim says.

It is not just Tests, playing first-class games could have been beneficial as well.

"Your technique is completely challenged in longer-version cricket. In T20s, you can bowl slowers but in longer-version the wicket has to be earned with skill. You acquire that skill with hardships day in and day out. That's where mental strength and perseverance comes from.

"Every format has a different trait and your mentality develops according to that. Talking about perseverance, when a partnership develops and reaches 200, you are still bowling and persevering. That mental development is missing," Fahim concluded.

Bullish Arteta accepts demand to win

AGENCIES, LONDON

Mikel Arteta responded to Arsenal legend Thierry Henry's claims that the Gunners were 'too emotional', expressing confidence that Arsenal could return to winning ways after damaging draws against Liverpool and West Ham cost them momentum in the Premier League "When you set the standards and expectations really high, after you have to maintain them, and to win every game in the Premier League is extremely difficult. It's not like we lost five games in the last six and we are in this situation, it's that you draw two matches, two very difficult fixtures away from home.

"But when you are there you are expected to win, to win, to win, because there's a necessity. To get the Premier League you have to win almost every single game. That's the demand and you have to accept it."

The Gunners let two-goal leads slip in both of their last two games and the leaders are now just four points ahead of defending champions Manchester City, who have a game in hand.

The two title-chasing teams meet at the Etihad Stadium next week in a match that could prove pivotal.

"I don't know the last time we beat Man City so it's going to be a tough one," Henry said on CBS Sports. "The last game against them [a 3-1 defeat in February] didn't reassure me. Since the start of the season I've been talking about emotions and how you don't win league titles with emotion. I'm sorry,

A Japanese company is likely to get the job of operating the third terminal of Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport (HSIA), which includes ground and cargo handling.

However, administrative, security, immigration, and customs services will be provided by officials and employees of the government agencies concerned.

Civil Aviation Authority of Bangladesh (CAAB) has recently appointed Japanese consulting firm Nippon Koei to determine how an operating company would run the airport, how profits and expenditures would be shared, and who would be responsible for what, sources at CAAB said.

Several domestic and foreign companies have shown interest in operating the third terminal.

The Japanese company has already submitted a proposal for this and a meeting was recently held at the Prime Minister's Office to discuss the proposal.

Sources at the civil aviation ministry said the government is positive about the proposal.

charity distribution 85 killed in Yemen stampede

Hundreds hurt; three detained

AFP, Sanaa

At least 85 people were killed and hundreds injured in a crush at a Ramadan cash handout in Yemen early yesterday, as the impoverished country suffered one of its worst tragedies just as optimism was growing over its bitter civil war.

Three people were detained over the incident in Sanaa, Yemen's rebel-held capital, after large crowds gathered at a school to receive gifts of 5,000 rial (about $8) for the end of the holy month of Ramadan.

Harrowing footage screened by the Iran-backed Huthi rebels' Al Masirah TV showed a tightly packed crowd screaming and shoving, unable to move, while others attempted to haul stricken people out of the crush.

Other shots showed dead bodies on the ground as the panic continued. Piles of abandoned sandals, clothing and a crutch littered the scene.

At least "85 were killed and more than 322 were injured", a Huthi security official told AFP on condition of anonymity, adding that around 50 were in a serious condition.

"Women and children were among the dead," the official said. A health official confirmed the toll.

The incident comes just ahead of Eid al-Fitr, and punctures a buoyant mood over the war in the Arabian Peninsula's poorest country, following peace talks and an exchange of nearly 1,000 prisoners last week.

Eyewitnesses said gunfire sparked a stampede after crowds gathered at the school, in Sanaa's historic Bab Al-Yemen district, to receive the handouts from a businessman. AFP could not verify the reports of gunfire. The head of the Huthis' Supreme Revolutionary Committee, Mohamed Ali al-Huthi, blamed "overcrowding", saying that people were packed in a narrow street leading to the school's back entrance.

Once the gates opened, the crowd streamed into a tight staircase leading to the courtyard where the distribution was taking place.

"People flocked in a huge way, the gate opened, and with the large numbers, the stampede happened."

The Huthis' political chief Mahdi al-Mashat said a committee had been formed to investigate, and a Huthi security official said three people had been detained on suspicion of involvement and an investigation was underway.

They include four of a family; bus hits truck on Dhaka-Mawa highway halting traffic for an hour

STAR REPORT

Eight people, including four of a family, were killed in two road accidents in Munshiganj and Dinajpur yesterday.

Four people, including two children, were killed in a head-on collision between a bus and a CNG-run three-wheeler in Dinajpur's Chirirbandar upazila yesterday morning.

The dead are Uttam Roy, 40, and his wife Pallavi Roy, 32, and their two children. Names of the children, aged between 10 and 12, could not be known immediately, said Bazlur Rashid, officer-in-charge of Chirirbandar Police Station.

Quoting locals and eyewitnesses, the OC said a Phulbari-bound bus of Keya Paribahan collided head-on with a Dinajpurbound CNG-run threewheeler in Shibpur area on Dinajpur-Phulbari highway around 10:30am.

The two children died on the spot, said the OC, adding that four other injured, including the three-wheeler driver, were taken to Dinajpur M Abdur Rahim Medical College Hospital.

In most years, there is an increase in road accidents and casualties during Eid vacations, when a large number of people from the capital travel to their home districts.

New 'pristine' coral reef found in Galapagos

CNN ONLINE

A scientific expedition has discovered a previously unknown coral reef with abundant marine life off Ecuador's Galapagos Islands, the country's environment ministry said.

"A deepwater scientific expedition has found the first totally pristine coral reef, approximately two kilometres (1.2 miles) long, at 400 metres (deep), on the summit of a > submarine mountain," Environment Minister Jose Davalos said on Twitter.

Davalos said on Twitter.

"Galapagos surprises us again."

Scientists had believed that the only Galapagos reef to survive El Nino weather in 1982 and 1983 was one called the Wellington reef, along the coast of Darwin Island, but the new discovery shows other coral has persisted, the ministry said in a statement on Monday.

The roof has more than 50 persont living coral.

The reef has more than 50 percent living coral. "This is very important at a global level because many deepwater systems are degraded," said Stuart Banks, senior marine researcher at the Charles Darwin Foundation, who participated in the expedition. The coral is several thousand years old at least, he added.

The South American country last year expanded the Galapagos marine reserve by 60,000 square kilometres (23,166 square miles), an extension of the 138,000 square kilometres already in place, to protect endangered migratory species between the Galapagos and the Cocos Island in Costa Rica.

Though very colourful, this bird is very shy and remains hidden in the undergrowth of trees, and hunts for food, mainly insects, on the forest floor. # SpaceX Starship, world's biggest rocket, explodes

AFP, Starbase

SpaceX's Starship, the most powerful rocket ever built, exploded yesterday during the first test flight of the spacecraft designed to send astronauts to the Moon, Mars and beyond.

The gigantic rocket successfully blasted off at 8:33am Central Time (1333 GMT) from Starbase, the private SpaceX spaceport in Boca Chica, Texas.

The Starship capsule had been scheduled to separate from the first-stage rocket booster three minutes into the uncrewed flight but separation failed to occur and the rocket blew up.

Despite the failure to complete the full flight test, SpaceX declared it a success.

"With a test like this success comes

"With a test like this, success comes from what we learn ...," SpaceX tweeted.

Starship consists of a 164-foot tall spacecraft designed to carry crew and cargo that sits atop a 230-foot tall first-stage Super Heavy booster rocket.

The US space agency Nasa has picked the Starship spacecraft to ferry astronauts to the Moon in late 2025 -- a mission known as Artemis III -- for the first time since the Apollo programme ended in 1972.
