The Saat Masjid Road was abuzz with a unique cultural programme yesterday evening, as environmentalists gathered to protest against the recent tree felling in the area. Through the folk songs, they highlighted the urgent need to preserve nature and protect the environment. They also held a human chain on the road near Abahani field to protest the ongoing tree felling. The event drew a crowd of concerned citizens who joined in to raise their voices against the reckless destruction of trees in the locality by the Dhaka South City Corporation. Chief Executive of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association Syeda Rizwana Hasan, social activist Shireen Huq, coordinator of Saat Masjid Road Tree Protection Movement Amirul Rajiv, and Coordinator of Green Voice Alamgir Kabir, among others, spoke. Syeda Rizwana Hasan said, "We have submitted a memorandum to the mayor, but we haven't heard anything back. There are currently only 37 trees remaining on Saat Masjid road [from Jigatala to Shankar]. Shireen Huq said, "It is the responsibility of the city mayors to protect the trees of this city, but they are the ones felling trees instead." Amirul Rajiv said, "We will stay the night here to protect the remaining trees. We won't let them (DSCC) cut any more trees." The trees are being cut from Jigatala to near the Abahani playground under a Tk 9.62 crore project, aiming to develop different infrastructures.

It is the responsibility of the mayors to protect the trees of this city, but they are the ones felling trees instead.

SAAT MASJID ROAD Trees felled flouting rules

DSCC did not take necessary permission to cut trees, say forest department sources

MOSTAFA YOUSUF and SAJJAD HOSSAIN
The lush greenery of Dhaka is slowly disappearing, and in some instances the perpetrator behind this devastation is none other than the Dhaka South City Corporation. DSCC's tree-felling frenzy is not just environmentally disastrous it's also illegal under existing provisions, as the city authority has been cutting trees without obtaining the necessary permission from the Forest Department, according to the department sources. The Forest Department can file a lawsuit against the city corporation for this infraction, confirmed inside sources there, but whether they will exercise their power is another matter entirely. Meanwhile, environmentalists have said it's time to hold DSCC accountable for their reckless actions and protect the green lungs of the city before it's too late. Trees are being cut in the name of infrastructural development and beautification works at Saat Masjid Road in Dhanmondi, despite the fact that permission must be obtained from the Divisional Forest Officer (DFO) under Section 5 of the Forest Product Transit Rules-2011. Md Saidul Islam, the divisional forest officer of Dhaka Social Forestry, said he cannot recall whether the DSCC sought permission or not. "As per the rules, it is mandatory to seek permission from our department before cutting any trees," he added. However, a Forest Department official, who wished to remain anonymous, said they never received any application from the city corporation for cutting the trees on Saat Masjid Road. The official also said the Forest Department could sue any individual or agency for violating the rule. Dhaka has lost 56 percent of its green coverage over the last three decades, according to a study conducted by Jahangirnagar University's Department of Environmental Sciences last year. This is a cause for concern, particularly in light of recent record-high temperatures. The United Nations Environmental Programme (UNEP) recommends that a city must have 25 percent of green coverage out of its total area. Syeda Rizwana Hasan, the chief executive of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association (Bela), said, "In urban planning, it is not mandatory to put the divider in the middle of the road. They are doing it on the pretext of beautification or facilitating vehicular movement. However, it serves no such purpose." "Public interest and people's expectations must be prioritised in projects that are implemented with public money," added Rizwana.
