for their identities and orientations. We have to go for gender-neutral parenting. A parent's duties towards their children don't just end after giving birth to them," said Tania. "They (parents) must be taught how to nurture a child. There must be a comprehensive study on the gender-diverse population to get the real picture of the violation of rights faced by them," he said. Tamanna Rahman, member of the executive committee of Bandhu Social Welfare, said no society can go ahead leaving an entire community behind, rather, the one that progresses with participation from everyone is a balanced society. "We have been working for a long time on the issue. However, we need to ask ourselves how much we have achieved during this time," she said. Huma Khan, senior human rights advisor of the UN Resident Coordinators Office in Bangladesh, said the publication of the report was a praiseworthy initiative, as relevant data on this issue is rare. "It is important that we look for support within society, as it is crucial to reduce the violation of rights of the gender-diverse population," said Huma.

frustrated and alienated, sometimes even leading to tragic consequences."

Premier University Vice Chancellor Prof Anupam Sen emphasised the importance of students and the education system being technology-friendly.

"Without [being technology-friendly], we cannot cope with the current world."

AK Azad Chowdhury, former UGC chairman and Dhaka University Emeritus Professor, highlighted the need for increased budget allocations for universities and said more funds are necessary to promote intellectual freedom, research, academic excellence, innovation, and liberty in public universities.

He criticised the decision to deny permission for a private university due to a lack of land, stating, "Having skilled teachers is more important than having land and buildings."

Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury, deputy minister for the Ministry of Education, pointed out the existence of a caste system in higher education, where three types of education (private, public, and national university) create disparities.

He called for the development of a structure to determine a uniform fee for all students pursuing higher education in public universities and emphasised the importance of alumni contributions to address the funding crisis.

The deputy minister urged UGC to expand its capacity to regulate colleges and tackle the issue of discrimination in higher education. He also urged the public university authorities to collaborate with professional bodies to enhance their quality of education.

Education Minister Dipu Moni acknowledged that their primary focus in the first decade was to ensure education for all. While admitting that achieving uniform education for all is challenging, she said significant efforts have been made in this regard.

"Our goal is to make education enjoyable," she said.

According to the education minister, the budgetary allocation for education has increased significantly. However, its current level is affected by mega projects. She emphasised that once the projects conclude, the education sector will be their top priority.

The discussion was presided over by UGC Chairman Professor Kazi Shahidullah. UGC Professor Md Abu Taher also spoke at the discussion.

a participatory and inclusive approach to universal health coverage" acknowledged the important role community clinics play in promoting primary healthcare, women's empowerment, community engagement and mobilisation towards achieving universal access to health.

Hasina mentioned that Bangladesh can share its experience of the community clinics with other UN member states to ensure primary healthcare services in those countries. She thanked the people of Bangladesh for giving her party (Awami League) a chance to remain in power since 2009, which resulted in this achievement.

Elaborating on the role of community clinics in achieving targets of ensuring primary health care, she said they played a crucial role in reducing child and maternal mortality rate, and women are also getting health services during their maternity period.
