ChatGPT sees user decline for the first time since launch: reports

Mobile and desktop users visiting ChatGPT fell 9.7% last month, states a recent report by The Washington Post. According to the report, downloads of ChatGPT's iOS app are also showing a steady drop.

Since its launch in November last year, ChatGPT has become a favourite tool in many workplaces, quickly being able to generate and compile text on any given subject. Jobs such as copywriting and coding have become easier to conduct thanks to the promptness of this handy AI.

However, despite the usefulness of ChatGPT, The Washington Post report estimates that the chatbot's ability to make up false information and convincingly pass it off as true might be the key reason behind the user decline. Complaints regarding ChatGPT's answers being worse over time have also been increasing a lot more recently.

Twitter threatens Meta with lawsuit over hiring former employees

Twitter, the popular microblogging platform, threatened Meta, the parent company of Facebook, Instagram and WhatsApp, with a lawsuit a few hours after the launch of Threads - an app many believe to be Meta's replacement for Twitter.

As per a report by Reuters, a letter was sent to Mark Zuckerberg, CEO of Meta, by Twitter's lawyer Alex Spiro, in which Spiro accused Meta of hiring former Twitter employees who might be sharing highly confidential information regarding Twitter to Meta.

In the letter, Spiro detailed that Twitter "intends to strictly enforce its intellectual property rights", and demands Meta to take immediate steps to stop using any Twitter trade secrets. As a response, in a Threads post, Meta spokesperson Andy Stone said that no one in the Threads engineering team is a former Twitter employee.
