Employee who fell asleep sues company over loss of productivity

“Presentations are boring. These require some better engaging graphics, some explosions, car chase scenes and preferably narrated by Morgan Freeman.”

NUTBOLTU

Akmar Crimer, an employee at The Everyday Stare Agency for Beautiful People, filed a motion against his company for failing to keep him awake at office meetings.

The company engages in bringing influential content to the forefront of public knowledge. We are not sure what that means but it sounds cool. But all of that is done by beautiful people.

Akmer's lawyer is stating the company failed to acknowledge that office meetings did not include enough breaks.

“Presentations are boring. These require some better engaging graphics, some explosions, car chase scenes and preferably narrated by Morgan Freeman,” explained the lawyer Moniruzzaman Golachipa.

“How can my client stay awake and learn and contribute if he keeps falling asleep during meetings?” asked the irate lawyer who later billed our reporter for seven minutes.

“We did not even know he was falling asleep in our meetings. We would see him in the corner slumped in deep thought,” said the HR manager of TESAFBP.

Crimer stated that because he was nodding off, he could not keep (his head) up. Colleagues complained that work was getting held up. The Beautiful People Core Team was not even sure why he was in the organisation.

“We're an agency and he's an economics teacher,” pointed out an incredibly beautiful person from the core team.

The janitors reported that cleanup duties were delayed after each meeting because the cleaners thought Crimer was deep in thought after everyone had left and should not be disturbed. Now everyone is signing up for a new account on Threads just to say Akmar Crimer is a slacker. In this modern age of social media truth, what is the general public going to believe? A social media post or the reality? Is Crimer's reputation going down the drain? Or will it resurface unscathed like plastic bottles during rain around Dhanmondi Road 27?

Akmar Crimer is currently suing TESAFBP for negligence and damages to his reputation for a cool Tk 10 crore. Either that or more privacy in the urinals.

Forgotten film actor’s dance moves mistaken for heart attack

ERROR MUX

In a bizarre incident last week, semi-notable TV and film actor Jaded Kzan found himself rushed to the hospital after attempting to showcase his dance moves at a party. Clad in black faux leather, the actor was socialising with other guests when he suddenly contorted his body, convulsed, collapsed and crumpled to the floor, seemingly burdened by the weight of his recent IELTS preparation for a trip to the United States.

“I thought this was it. He bent down as if to pick something up, then shot up crookedly as if Bane from Batman had broken his back, and then he started waving his left hand in the air like he just didn't care,” recounted Simina Samin, a dancer hired to mingle with the crowd and distract people whenever the actor would say something awkward.

Faisal, an ardent fan of the TV show House, immediately sprang into action, assuming that the actor was suffering from a stroke, the flu, or even cancer. “I tackled him to the ground and began performing chest compressions. It appeared as though he was experiencing a stroke, the flu, or even cancer. Eight seasons of watching House, M.D. have prepared me for this very moment. My mother always said ‘porashunay fail korli, aaro phone tip boshe boshe’,” he gloated proudly at his quotation within quotes.

To the collective relief of many, Jaded Kzan remained sprawled on the ground. Some guests just wanted to go home. An ambulance was promptly called, and Jaded Kzan was swiftly whisked away to the hospital. At 10:46pm, the doctors there pronounced him irrelevant upon arrival.

Medical professionals later confirmed that the actor had not suffered a stroke, nor had he been struck down by overwhelming embarrassment, as many had assumed. He was simply knocked out by the chest compressions administered by Faisal.

Fortunately, Jaded Kzan made a full recovery and is now alive and well. Unfortunately, during his unconscious moments, he had a dream where he was asked to become a dancer and put up viral videos on social media. The actor Kzan (pronounced Makkhon) asked women everywhere not to cry because he will be back. On an unrelated note, a major sewer leak has erupted in Mohammadpur.

Introvert who can’t carry conversation shouts ‘that’s crazy’ in every reply

NAZIFA RAIDAH

Even at the age of 26, Syeda Chupchap Komkotha, a recent university graduate, struggles to socialise. It's not like she isn't interesting or doesn't have quirky insights to share, it's more of a general disinterest towards other human affairs.

But more often than not, she is mistaken for being “too pretentious”, although it's just mostly her minding her own business.

During her university days (thanks to the open credit system), she got away with just being by herself, submitting assignments, attending class, and giving exams. But after getting into the high-stakes modern *coughs capitalist* working environment, she realised that the scenario had to change.

Now she's expected to be in contact with several people for her own work, and minding her own business just meant eventually, nothing will get done. As a person wildly obsessed with collectibles, she knew she had to make a tradeoff.

And so as a very last resort, Komkotha decided to try out the Beshikotha Bootcamp (BB) that popped on her newsfeed one day.

“Welcome to the Corporate Conversations Bootcamp. I'm your trainer, Shakil, and I'm here to mold you into top-tier corporate communicators. Today, we'll be focusing on navigating those treacherous waters of small talk and office chit-chat.”

One of the attendees, Ajib Ashraf, raised their hand.

“Uh, yeah, I'm not really sure why I need to learn small talk. I mean, I'm here to work, not chat.”

“Ah, excellent point, Ajib. But remember, the art of small talk is the secret sauce that oils the wheels of corporate camaraderie.

It's how you build those all-important 'networking' relationships that lead you to unlock your dreams,” says Shakil, with a smile wide as the Cheshire cat.

Although the whole workshop seemed quite creepy, but at the end of the day, Komkotha figured out her Holy Grail – she knew the perfect combination of words, the phrase that is going save her butt.

The next day as she sat down to work, her usual chatty coworker Bachal Belal came over to her desk. He went on and on about his son's diaper expenses and unionising for pay. Komkotha smiled and nodded, just as Shakil had instructed. She zoned out thinking if Belal had spent a fifth of his chat and smoke breaks, he would've gotten the raise he had been complaining about.

Just when it seemed like Belal huffed out all his words, Komkotha laughs out and says, “That's craaaazy!”

“I know! You know you're pretty great to talk to,” replies Belal.

Komkotha grinned, and thought, “That's craaaaaazy”.

Conspiracy theorist in shock after learning the real truth

JEAN PAUL SATIRE

“Conspiration nation, you don't know the real truth but I do, and you won't believe it but I have done that hard work for you so listen up!” – is how famous Twitch streamer and YouTuber, Sacchi Mucchi, popularly known as DeyBlyin, would begin most of his videos.

After gathering disproportionate popularity as well as notoriety on the internet for far flung conspiracy theories that disparaged governments and large corporations, Mucchi had been touted by many as the smartest man in the world. Others called him delusional, imploring law enforcement to interfere and send him to get mental health treatment.

Yet, the most unexpected response may have come from the entity who seemed to be the biggest target of videos made by DeyBlyin. Authorities from the Pacific Aeronautics and Space Administration (PASA), invited Mr. Mucchi to their premises for a thorough debunking and information sharing session.

Yesterday, a video was released from DeyBlyin's YouTube channel titled “You won't believe what I learned in PASA”.

“Conspiration nation... you don't know the real truth and now I must admit, that I didn't know either. L..I thought I did, I truly believed so, but

This man has just realised that gravity is real.

“You don’t know the real truth and now I must admit, that I didn’t know either. L...I thought I did, I truly believed so, but now I’ve been shown conclusive proof that I was wrong and honestly, we should be more worried.”

now I've been shown conclusive proof that I was wrong and honestly, we should be more worried,” he said.

DeyBlyin went on to explain that his visit to PASA had convinced him that the climate crisis is completely real, and that he would soon be moving from his seaside mansion to a place far up in the mountains to escape the rising sea levels. He expressed amazement that scientists weren't more alarmed, and said more people should be panicking day and night because the death and devastation projected by PASA due to the climate crisis is both believable and frightening.

When it came to the governments of the world and world peace, DeyBlyin was on the verge of tears trying to explain to his viewers that at any given time, the world is minutes away from global nuclear warfare. He went on to say that none of the governments really care about their citizens and they are run by egotistical maniacs who would much rather destroy humanity than admit defeat in a staring contest.

DeyBlyin claimed that PASA had gathered this information using their superpowered earth orbiting satellites that they secretly used to spy on people, which, incidentally, is something DeyBlyin had theorised about years ago.

DeyBlyin shocked viewers at the end by announcing that he has planned to shut down his social media channels to focus on working closely with PASA in raising awareness and doing his best to save the planet and humanity. This message was then received with a steady stream of Fs in the chat.
