

Embracing Growth

Campus and Rising Stars Take Centre Stage

Welcome to a new era of youth engagement and empowerment! We are thrilled to announce the return of "Campus" and "Rising Stars", two beloved content platforms. Campus will cater to students in higher studies, focusing on education, personal development, and upskilling, while Rising Stars will address the unique challenges and aspirations of school-goers.

Why the revival, you may ask? The answer lies in the evolving landscape of youth engagement. Our sister publication, SHOUT, embarked on an incredible journey in 2013 to connect with the youth across all age groups, from schoolchildren to university graduates. As the demand for tailored content continued to surge, we recognised the need to provide distinct platforms for different age groups, each with its own unique mindset.

By collaborating with universities and educational institutions, we aim to create a vibrant community driven by curiosity and ambition. Together, Campus and Rising Stars cover the full spectrum of youth engagement, amplifying the voices of young minds and empowering them to shape the future.

Starting today, Campus will grace your Thursdays with enlightening content, with the exception of the last week of each month when Rising Stars will take the spotlight. Both platforms will also provide daily online content to keep you connected, informed, and inspired.

Join us as we explore the limitless possibilities ahead, embracing growth and celebrating the power of the youth. Stay tuned for captivating editions filled with articles, features, and perspectives that ignite passion and unlock potential.

With warm regards,

ANIME REVIEW

Vinland SAGA

Production-wise, Vinland Saga needs no prior introduction. Handled by Wit Studio and MAPPA throughout the years, the set pieces have always looked stunning and the art style breathes life into Yukimura's luscious world.

Vinland Saga might be imperfect, but the thematic ambition of discarding the very hook that attracted most of its fanbase speaks volumes in favour of the show's structural metamorphosis. At its core, it might be a tale of a young man searching for his place in a world that has displaced him, but the nuanced, complex, and bold approach makes it a must-watch.

LETTERS

SHOUT has kept me quiet company for many years now, and I will miss the relatable weekly musings of young people such as me. My Thursdays probably won't feel all that different but a small thing that has been constant for so many years will now finally change.

I am, however, intrigued about what Campus will be all about. I have been an avid reader of The Daily Star for a long time, and I expect them to deliver something impressive, like always.

Graduate student, Dhaka University

In Bangladesh, universities, especially private universities, lack inter-university connection and representation when it comes to the students. I don't mean friendships and other personal relationships, but more so in regards to the experience of being a student. There is a lack of a common space for discussion where university-going students can connect with each other on academic, administrative, bureaucratic, and equity matters. There's an increasing need for such a platform that can act as a mouthpiece for student representation and uphold their concerns.
