Waterborne disease an added worry amid dengue surge

HELEMUL ALAM and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

While the country's health services are already struggling to cope with the dengue influx, other viral fevers and waterborne diseases are further aggravating the situation.

Doctors advised all to exercise caution while consuming water and fluids like juices from outside as these can be the origin of waterborne diseases like cholera, diarrhoea, typhoid, amebiasis, hepatitis, and gastrointestinal complications.

Brig Gen Quazi Md Rashid Un-Nabi, director of Sir Salimullah Medical College Mitford Hospital, said 30 to 40 percent of their outdoor patients are coming with fever, most of them with viral fever apart from dengue.

He said the number of patients with dengue is now slightly decreasing but those of other viral fever are high.

"Of the patients coming to the hospital, around 50 percent have influenza-like illnesses and waterborne diseases other than dengue," said HM Nazmul Ahsan, associate professor at Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital.

He said around 5 to 10 percent of patients are coinfected with dengue and other diseases like pneumonia, typhoid or urinary tract infection.

These patients are in a risky group and need hospitalisation, he said.

Coinfection is suspected when a dengue patient does not recover within a week; then prompt steps are necessary, Nazmul Ahsan added.

Meanwhile, at least nine dengue patients died, six of them in Dhaka city, in the last 24 hours till yesterday morning, according to Directorate General of Health Services.

The total number of deaths from dengue rose to 435

JMB no longer a major threat

Say law enforcement agencies

SHARIFUL ISLAM

Banned militant outfit Jama'atul Mujahideen Bangladesh (JMB) hardly poses any security risks at this moment. However, it may attempt to reorganise in small factions, taking advantage of unstable political situations ahead of the national election, said officials engaged in countering militancy.

The outlawed group, now known as mainstream JMB, has no known leader in Bangladesh. Meanwhile, its strength has significantly weakened after many of its active members joined other militant groups. The outfit is also plagued with a shortage of funds required to reorganise it, the officials added.

An official of Anti-Terrorism Unit (ATU) made the apprehension

Following the August 17 attacks, 159 cases were filed against 256 named and many unnamed accused. Verdicts in 116 cases have been delivered in which 322 JMB militants were convicted.

The group detonated 459 bombs in half an hour at 300 locations in 63 of the 64 districts.

Amid law enforcers' drive to arrest the group's kingpins and operatives, JMB targeted the country's judiciary -- court buildings, judges, and government officials -- with suicide attacks.

If political situation gets unstable, JMB members may take advantage and try to reorganise again.

as they have information that eight to 10 militants, including some who were accused of cases filed over the countrywide bombing in 2005, have gone off their radar after being freed on bail or serving jail terms.

JMB, founded in 1998 with an aim to establish an Islamic state in Bangladesh, grabbed the spotlight with a synchronised, countrywide bomb blast on this day (August 17) in 2005.

Following the August 17 attacks, 159 cases were filed against 256 named and many unnamed accused. Investigators pressed charges in 149 cases against 1,131 militants. Final reports were placed in the remaining 10 cases, according to Police Headquarters data.

Verdicts in 116 cases have been delivered, in which 322 JMB leaders and activists were convicted and 358 acquitted.

Trial of 43 cases are still pending with different courts, the data shows.

Md Asaduzzaman, chief of Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime (CTTC) unit, said JMB is now facing an existential crisis.

"Its top leader Salahuddin alias Salehin, who is hiding abroad, at times tried to reorganise the group in Bangladesh, but could not succeed due to our intervention," he told The Daily Star yesterday.

Khandaker Al Moin, Rab's legal and media wing director, said JMB is significantly weakened as many of its active members joined other militant organisations.
