Dollar up against major currencies

REUTERS, New York

The US dollar advanced against a basket of currencies on Friday as the latest batch of data on business activity from around the globe highlighted the superior position of the United States relative to other major economies.

S&P Global said its flash US Composite PMI index, which tracks the manufacturing and service sectors, dipped to a reading of 50.1 in September from a final reading for August of 50.2. September's result was barely above the 50 level that separates expansion and contraction.

Still, the US economy so far this year has defied projections for sliding into a recession that most economists had expected would be triggered by the Federal Reserve's aggressive interest rate increases aimed at quelling

The data comes on the heels of disappointing

The US dollar index was 0.2 percent higher at 105.6 after having risen as high as 105.78 earlier in the session data from Europe, which showed that economic activity in France fell much more quickly than expected in September.

Separate survey data covering the whole euro zone showed that the economy likely contracted in the third quarter.

"The US is continuing to outpace the rest of the world and I think it will continue to do so for some time," Michael Brown, market analyst at Trader X, said of the US data.

"Unless we see a sustained pickup in growth in the rest of DM (developed markets), I struggle to take a bearish view on the buck over the mediumterm, as the FX market's focus increasingly shifts to which central bank will spend the longest time at its terminal rate," Brown said.

The US dollar index - which measures the currency against six major counterparts - was 0.2 percent higher at 105.6 after having risen as high as 105.78 earlier in the session. That puts the index on pace for a weekly gain of about 0.3 percent, its 10th straight week of gains, its longest winning streak in nearly a decade.

adviser for structural reforms

REUTERS, Shanghai

China has limited room for further monetary policy easing, and it should pursue structural reforms such as encouraging entrepreneurs rather than counting on macroeconomic policies to revive growth, a central bank adviser said on Sunday.

Liu Shijin, a member of the People's Bank of China's (PBOC) monetary policy committee, told a financial forum in Shanghai that Beijing's room for monetary policy easing was limited by widening interest rate differentials with the US.

Fiscally, Chinese governments at various levels are under stress, he told the annual Bund

Summit conference. "If China continues focus on macro policies in its efforts to stabilise growth, there would be more and more side effects," said Liu, vice president of the Research Development the State Center of Council.

"More importantly. we will again miss the opportunity for structural reforms.

China's post-Covid recovery has lost momentum amid weak consumption, falling exports and a deepening property debt crisis, and the economy is struggling despite a slew of monetary and fiscal measures to boost confidence.
