

TV SERIES REVIEW

BUSINESS PROPOSAL

What happens when you take the popular rom-com trope of fake dating, and add a case of mistaken identity to it? A brilliant and hilarious K-drama that's hard not to love, of course. When Shin Ha-ri goes on a blind date pretending to be her best friend and finds out that her date is actually the new CEO and boss of the company she works at, all chaos ensues. Hilariously quirky and adorably romantic, Business Proposal is the perfect comfort show for days when all you want to do is shut off your brain and watch rich, attractive people fall in love.

MOVIE REVIEW

WE ARE MARSHALL

We Are Marshall is based on the real-life Marshall University air disaster that killed the football team's students and coaches. The film shows how interconnected the people of Huntington were with the university football team, and follows a young, charismatic coach, Jack Lengyel, portrayed by Matthew McConaughey, who tries to rebuild the squad and mend relationships. The movie shows how much sports mean to people. It also shows how they try to cope with grief through sports.

LETTER

Dear Campus,

As graduation comes closer, I am starting to wonder what all of this was for. I am starting to realise that once I am out of university, employers will be more interested in my skills than the certificate I have. It makes me wonder if the time and effort put behind becoming a university graduate is worth it. In the olden days, people would become apprentices to masters, and learn essential trade skills on the job. Why, then, in the modern day, do we work so hard for so many years in university trying to get a degree instead of working on our skills and getting an advantage early in life?

Sincerely,
Shoaib Ahmed Sayam,
North South University

RESPONSE

Dear Shoaib,

Your concern is valid. Yet, you must look at the bigger picture. Are there enough masters to give apprenticeships to every individual wanting a better life? Moreover, the skills you have acquired are down to your hard work, but university not only gives you knowledge and teaches skills, it also gives you the ability to learn. Your education allows you to absorb knowledge from the world, and we should be grateful for that.

Best wishes,
