

ANIME

HELL'S PARADISE

A fantastic gateway to the world of dark fantasy shounen

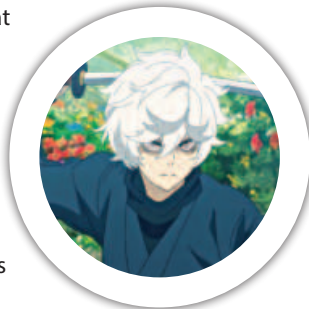

Hell's Paradise is a hauntingly beautiful show that follows a legendary shinobi assassin named Gabimaru the Hollow who's been condemned to execution for his unthinkable crimes. He and his executioner Sagiri, along with numerous pairs of notorious convicts, are forced to travel to Shinsenkyo, a faraway ancient island that borders between being heaven and hell, to receive a pardon for their crimes. Their objective is to find the elixir of life that grants immortality despite all odds.

But as soon as they embark on the island, they are encountered with supernatural foes and entities that far surpass any humane characteristics. As such, a race to stay alive by eliminating each other while also inching closer to the all-encompassing elixir begins.

Hell's Paradise excels within the battle anime format by sticking close to its shounen staples while also venturing into much more grim territories. The somewhat formulaic progression is kept intact throughout the show, but the tensions are raised by introducing life-or-death stakes.

The enigmatic style of animation employed throughout the show flawlessly captures these gritty moments and takes the source material up a notch. Moreover, the action sequences are masterfully choreographed, showcasing brutal and visually striking battles that leave a lasting impact.

Hell's Paradise's unapologetically grotesque nature makes it a memorable experience throughout its runtime. The relentless battles, morally ambiguous choices, and intricate web of storytelling that still stays true to traditional shounen themes make the show a terrific example of the genre's potential and promise.

LETTER

Dear Campus,

With the ongoing blockades and strikes taking place across the country, classes have shifted online again. While I don't mind attending classes from the comfort of my home, I personally don't think we're fully ready for online classes again. Be it for the lack of a proper infrastructure to support such a mode of academic learning or for our own lack of commitment towards it, I think online learning fails to make the same impact as in-person classes. Yet, we're having to return to virtual learning despite its many shortcomings. What worries me most however, is how I am going to come out of this whole debacle. For the time being, all I can do is hope.

RESPONSE

Dear Adeeba,

There is no doubt that online classes are difficult to cope with, especially when we all thought the days of virtual learning were behind us. The sad reality though is that there isn't much any of us can do. With the country being hurled into political turmoil, and the consequent uncertainty, online classes are the safest route – both for students and the staff. We do empathise with your situation though, and hope that the faith you have helps you cope with this scenario.

Good luck,
Campus
