KILLERS OF THE FLOWER MOON

A horrifying portrayal of a historically important event

HASIB UR RASHID IFTI

The movie, set in 1920s Oklahoma, tells the story of the series of murders that took place in the Osage nation. But in its 3 hours and 26 minutes runtime, beneath its murders and the investigation, Killers of the Flower Moon tells a story of greed on which lies the birth of the American nation. The story starts with Ernest Burkhart, played by Leonardo Di Caprio, reaching Oklahoma to his uncle William Hale, played by Robert De Niro. Killers of the Flower Moon isn't a typical whodunit murder mystery. The who, why, and how of the murders are pretty evident. There is no great big reveal in the end or any gut-wrenching sequence that scars you. But that's where the Scorsese magic comes in. The violence isn't presented as a shock but rather is normalised throughout the film because that's how frequent and insignificant the violence upon the Osage people was to the outsiders living there.

The movie could've been chopped down to under three hours but I'm glad it wasn't. The Osage people, their land, and the tragedy stay with you even after the movie ends thanks to that extra space Scorsese took in the screenplay.

LETTER

Dear Campus,
Looking back, my academic journey has been a gratifying experience. From my initial steps on the grounds of my university to the present, I've faced various challenges and celebrated successes. Every lecture hall, library study session, and collaborative project has contributed to my development, nurturing not just knowledge but also resilience and adaptability. I have been able to explore my intellectual capabilities in an environment where curiosity can flourish without limitation. As I prepare myself for the next chapter of my academic journey, I carry the invaluable memories and lessons created within these walls. Thank you for consistently being a source of inspiration and learning.

Sincerely,
Tashfiah Tahsin
4th year student, Electrical and Electronic Engineering (EEE), Independent University, Bangladesh

RESPONSE

Dear Tashfiah,
We are glad that you had such gratifying experiences throughout your academic journey. University life is full of challenges, and you can attest to that. However, the fact that you have managed to navigate these challenges so well showcases just how strong your willpower has been over the period of your undergraduate journey. As you prepare to take the next step in your academic journey and future endeavours, we wish you nothing but the best.

Regards,
Campus
