

‘Abed left this world a complete man’

Rehman Sobhan tells event; book on the BRAC founder launched

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

“Abed left this world with a sense of satisfaction. Few people can say they have lived a fulfilling life. Not only in Bangladesh, he has also improved the quality of life of millions of people worldwide. So, I think he left this world a complete man, and there can be no greater reward than that,” said eminent economist Dr Rehman Sobhan at a book launching event yesterday.

Marking the fourth death anniversary of Sir Fazle Hasan Abed, the Bangla translation of a biographical book on the life of the BRAC founder was launched at the capital’s BRAC Centre.

The book “Ashar Joy” elaborates on various aspects of Abed’s extensive work, creative development thinking, and innovative models for poverty and inequality eradication.

The original book titled “Hope Over Fate: Fazle Hasan Abed and the Science of Ending Global Poverty” was authored by Scott Macmillan and translated into Bangla by Alvi Ahmed.

BOALKHALI-CHANDGAON Ctg-8 to get fourth lawmaker in 5 years

ARUN BIKASH DEY, Ctg

The Chattogram 8 (Boalkhali Chandgaon) constituency will get its fourth lawmaker in five years in the upcoming national polls.

When Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal executive president Mayeen Uddin Khan Badal was nominated as Awami League-led 14-party alliance candidate from Chattogram-8 in 2008, local AL men were not pleased, but accepted the party decision.

Badal went on to become a three-time lawmaker from the constituency till 2018.

However, the situation changed after Badal’s demise on November 7, 2019.

Chattogram South district unit President Moslem Uddin Ahmed was elected following by-polls held on January 12, 2020. After three years, Moslem passed away from cancer on February 6, 2023. Then AL’s Chattogram city unit Organising Secretary Noman Al Mahmud got elected from by-polls on April 27, 2023.

Noman secured the AL’s nomination for this constituency for the upcoming national polls. Yet, on the last day of candidacy withdrawal, AL opted to sacrifice the seat for a Jatiya Party candidate following negotiations, thwarting Noman’s chance for a second term as a lawmaker.

JP nominated its Central Vice Chairman Solaiman Alam Seth for Chattogram-8.

IT’S SOLAIMAN VS SALAM

The voting battle in the seat will be held mainly between Solaiman and Abdus Salam, an independent candidate who failed to secure AL’s nomination.

Nine other candidates from eight other parties are also contesting in this constituency.

Salam was a former chairman of Chattogram Development Authority (CDA) and treasurer of Chattogram city unit AL.

According to sources, none of the 10 candidates have ever been elected lawmaker before. So, no matter who the voters elect, the constituency will have a new lawmaker.

‘King’s parties’ offices gather dust

No election activities visible in BNM, BSP, Trinamool BNP headquarters

A few months ago, much speculation surrounded the roles of “king’s parties” (allegedly created or sponsored by strong actors to further their cause) in the upcoming national polls.

However, as time progresses, it is becoming evident that these parties might be contesting the polls just for the sake of it.

This newspaper found the offices of Bangladesh Nationalist Movement (BNM), Bangladesh Supreme Party (BSP), and Trinamool BNP deserted in a recent visit.

At first glance, there is an apparent disconnect, with no visible signs of participation in an election less than a month away.

However, the scenario was different a month ago, when long lines of nomination aspirants were seen in front of their office premises. But over the last two weeks, no senior leaders, activists, or candidates have been visiting the offices, said party insiders and locals.

According to Election Commission data, 1,895 candidates will run in the upcoming parliamentary election. Of them, 133 are from Trinamool BNP, 79 from BSP, and 54 from BNM.

The three parties have been registered with the EC during the tenure of the incumbent commission.

During a visit to BNM’s Gulshan-2 office around 11:00am on Tuesday, this correspondent found the main gate was locked, with no party members visible even after an hour of waiting.

Only a tiny signboard perched above the entrance of a white building that reads, “BNM Office, Third Floor,” confirms the existence of a political party in the area.

“The BNM office doesn’t have a fixed opening time; occasionally some activities are seen around late afternoon,” said Kamal Hossain, who works in an electronics shop opposite the party office.

Similarly, this newspaper only saw a security guard while visiting the BSP office in Mirpur’s Shah Ali Bagh recently. The building that hosts the office is locally known as “Khanka Sharif,” and most locals are seemingly oblivious to any political party’s existence in the area.

Polls campaign goes online

KONGKON KARMAKER, Dinajpur

Aspirants from the constituencies in Dinajpur, Rangpur and Joypurhat have geared up their electioneering ahead of the 12th parliamentary polls following the distribution of electoral symbols on Monday.

The campaigns are gaining momentum, particularly on social media platforms, notably Facebook, alongside the usual trend of using loudspeakers, banners, and posters which started from yesterday.

After the symbols were distributed, a wave of vibrant black and white election posters of the candidates flooded social media, urging voters to rally for them in their respective constituencies.

Both Awami League and independent candidates from different constituencies in Dinajpur, Rangpur, and Joypurhat, and their supporters actively engaged in social media by sharing their posters on Facebook immediately after securing their electoral symbols on Monday.

The posts on Facebook sparked interactions, with individuals expressing their opinions through comments while some were sharing candidates’ portraits alongside their electoral symbols, said Sohel Rana from Hakimpur upazila of Dinajpur.

The digital space is essentially becoming a crucial battleground for candidates to connect with voters, showcasing the power of social media in influencing public opinion.

Masud Rana, a resident of Dinajpur town, who shared a poster and portrait of AL candidate M Iqbalur Rahim from Dinajpur-3 (Sadar), said Facebook is an effective way to reach maximum voters without any hassle, complementing traditional election campaigns.

Biswajit Ghosh Kanchan, a candidate from Dinajpur-3, garnered attention as netizens shared videos of him on Facebook.

‘Demand for local firearms on rise’

FM MIZANUR RAHAMAN, Ctg

The demand for locally-made firearms has risen in Chattogram and Cox’s Bazar ahead of the upcoming national election slated for January 7 next year, according to the law enforcers.

The information came to light after Chattogram police seized a firearms consignment of at least six locally-made pistols this month.

The seizure of firearms has highlighted the possibility of violence during polls as many independents are contesting against Awami League candidates in different constituencies of Chattogram and Cox’s Bazar.

Chattogram Metropolitan Police officials said criminals are trying to smuggle in illegal locally-made firearms from Cox’s Bazar’s Ramu upazila and the border areas along the hills.

“Police are trying to trace out the whole syndicate,” said a CMP official.

According to CMP officials and Rab sources, each locally-made firearm sells for Tk 20,000-40,000.

Mostafijur Rahman, deputy commissioner of Chattogram (south), said, “We have information that locally-made firearms are being smuggled in the city from border areas ahead of the election. We don’t want to elaborate the details now as an investigation is ongoing.”

The issue was discussed during a meeting on the district’s law and order on December 11 at Chattogram Circuit House, where officials expressed concerns that firearms may be used illegally during the polls.

Meanwhile, Rab 15 in Cox’s Bazar busted a firearms factory in a hilly area on December 13 and seized at least eight such firearms and raw materials for making guns and ammunition.

RAJSHAHI POLLS

AL grassroots ‘siding’ with independents

ANWAR ALL, Rajshahi

At least four Awami League candidates in Rajshahi contesting the upcoming national polls with the “boat” symbol are facing hurdles to win the support of the party’s grassroots.

Many local AL activists are rallying behind independent candidates within the party’s ranks, putting the ruling party candidates in an uncomfortable position.

The pattern has been visible since campaigning began.

“I have doubts about having support of local Awami League leaders and activists,” said Fazle Hossain Badsha, Workers’ Party general secretary who is contesting with the “boat” symbol from Rajshahi-2.

City AL vice president Shafiqur Rahman Badsha, who is contesting as an independent candidate from the same constituency, almost lost his candidacy first by the order of the returning officer, then the Election Commission and finally the High Court.

But he managed to find his way back into the race after the Supreme Court declared his candidacy legitimate.

“Local [AL] leaders won’t side with
