Justice Borhanuddin tells farewell reception

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The working class of the country can secure a decent livelihood if appropriate legal measures are implemented against those who exploit the nation's resources, said Justice Borhanuddin, the senior most judge of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, yesterday.

He was speaking at a farewell reception held on his last working day at the Appellate Division's courtroom-1 of the Supreme Court.

"The apex court of Bangladesh, as the constitutional court, must represent the voice of marginalised people," he said.

The judiciary serves as the guardian of the country's constitution, having the crucial duty to assess the consistency of laws passed by the legislature, he said.

The judiciary's role is to ensure that executive actions align with the fundamental rights outlined in the constitution.
