Heat takes a toll on expecting mothers

The ongoing heatwave has exacerbated the challenges faced by everyone in the country, but the situation has become particularly difficult for expecting mothers.

According to Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, pregnant women are more prone to heatrelated illnesses like exhaustion and heatstroke compared to other

This is because their bodies need to work harder to regulate both the mother's and the developing baby's temperatures.

As a result, the current heatwave has brought a new level of discomfort and difficulty for many expecting mothers, like first-time mother-to-be Sajida Islam Parul, a journalist due in the first week of May.

Despite already facing a high risk pregnancy due to gestational diabetes, thyroid issues, and cystic fibrosis, Sajida has been grappling with dehydration, food aversion, and sleeplessness over the past week.

"I can't eat anything. I'm constantly thirsty, but the water is warm, and I'm sweating like crazy, leading to cold symptoms and fever. I've been strictly advised to avoid consuming cold water," she shared.

"I stay awake all night, and due to sleep deprivation, I'm noticing reduced movements in my baby. Additionally, I'm experiencing persistent skin irritation with blisters on my neck," she added.

This correspondent has spoken to 15 pregnant women - they mentioned experiencing headaches, food aversion, constipation, and skin irritation during this heatwave.

More than three mentioned a pain in their abdomen due to constipation.

According to obstetricians and gynaecologists, expecting mothers experience increased heat due to heightened metabolic activity as they nurture a developing baby

RECOMMENDATIONS

Avoid sun exposure, unnecessary

Drink plenty of water (at least 12 glasses a day)

Regular check-ups

Stay at home, take enough rest

Wear loose, comfortable clothing

This often leads to dehydration, restlessness, urinary infections, constipation, fever, and other complications.

Excessive heat can also result in reduced fetal movement, potentially leading to premature labour and low birth weight in babies, cautioned the experts.

According to an analysis of 70 studies conducted since the mid-1990s and published in the British Medical Journal in 2020, for every 1 degree Celsius (1.8F) in temperature rise, the number of stillbirths and premature deliveries increases by about 5 percent.

gynaecologist and obstetrician and former president of the Obstetrical & Gynaecological Society of Bangladesh (OGSB), advised expectant mothers to stay hydrated, as excessive sweating can remove salt and minerals from their bodies.

"We recommend drinking plenty of water (at least 12 glasses a day) and consuming fruit juice for nondiabetic mothers, as well as opting for liquid-rich foods," she advised.

"Additionally, expectant mothers should stay at home and take enough rest, wear loose and comfortable clothing, and do regular checkups. If any issues arise, they should promptly seek medical attention."

Dr Ferdousi also emphasised the importance of avoiding sun exposure, unnecessary outings, and physical activities that may lead to excessive sweating.

Helena Jabeen, senior consultant Mohammadpur Fertility Services & Training Centre and 100 Bedded Mother and Child Hospital currently in PRL but still fulfilling duties -- informed The Daily Star that they have been observing that following the recent Eid holidays, many expectant mothers have come with symptoms of cold and fever, likely due to sudden changes in weather conditions.

She also recommended wearing breathable clothing, eating small, easily digestible meals frequently throughout the day, taking showers regularly, sleeping, and avoiding prolonged sun exposure, especially at noon.

Withdraw restrictions on journalists immediately TIB calls upon Bangladesh Bank

Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) yesterday expressed deep concern over the restrictions on journalists' access Bangladesh Bank.

organisation for immediate called withdrawal of such a move, terming this restriction an unprecedented obstacle in the way of media's professional responsibility in disclosing banking and financial sector information for interest.

In a written statement, TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman the restrictions are an unethical and arbitrary step in the way of ensuring people's legal right to know information.

He questioned what message the top leadership of Bangladesh Bank wants to send to everyone by deciding to stop the free flow of information when the banking sector is plagued by various crises, including bad loans, financial fraud, and lack of good governance.

Valerie Ann Taylor honoured for service to impoverished, persons with disabilities

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Valerie Ann Taylor, a British-born physiotherapist and humanitarian, was recognised yesterday for her enduring dedication and selfless service to the impoverished and individuals with disabilities in Bangladesh for over 43

She was honoured at the two-day-long international fest titled "International Disability Art Festival 2024" jointly organised by Dhaka Theatre and the British Council in association with Sundaram and the Institute of Informatics and Development at Bangladesh Shilpakala Academy.

Born on February 8, 1944, in Bromley, Kent, Valerie first arrived in Bangladesh representing Voluntary Service Overseas in 1969. She served as a physiotherapist at the Christian Hospital, Chandraghona, in the Chittagong Hill

Her concern for individuals afflicted by paralysis in Bangladesh grew as she observed the neglect with which patients enduring spinal injuries were handled.

Valerie was evacuated in 1971, during the Liberation War. Though she was only obligated to serve for 15 months, Bangladesh had impacted her greatly.

She returned to Bangladesh in 1972 after the war and devoted herself to serving patients suffering from paralysis. Later, she established the Centre for the Rehabilitation of

Has Chhatra Union lost its past glory?

SIRAJUL ISLAM RUBEL

Bangladesh Chhatra Union celebrated its 72nd anniversary yesterday.

Established in 1952 by student leaders who spearheaded the language movement, this organisation's activists have played vital roles in shaping the socio-political landscape of Bangladesh, from the struggle for language rights to the arduous journey towards liberation.

In independent Bangladesh, they have fearlessly confronted autocratic regimes, demanding justice and upholding democratic principles.

However, many now believe the organisation is just a shadow of its former self. For the last three years, the organisation has been divided into two factions due to a dispute over leadership.

During the Pakistani period, the Chhatra Union split in 1965, with Rashed Khan Menon and Matia Chowdhury leading two rival factions. In 1994, the organisation experienced another split, but the counter-committee was short-lived.

Many within Chhatra Union blamed unwanted interference from Communist Party of Bangladesh (CPB) for the body's latest split.

When there was a disagreement over leadership before the last council, CPB leaders sat down with Chhatra Union activists and proposed a supposed roadmap for forming a new committee, they added.

Such interference by CPB is against the student body's charter, they said.

However, former president of the student body and ex-VP of DUCSU, Mujahidul Islam Selim said Chhatra Union is on the right track. Selim remains optimistic
