Japan factory output seen up

REUTERS, Tokyo

Japanese factory output likely grew for a second straight month in April while retail sales picked up, a Reuters poll showed on Friday, highlighting budding signs of an economic recovery.

The rise in core consumer prices (CPI) in Tokyo areas, which become available a month earlier than nationwide, likely quickened in May.

Many analysts expect the economy to bottom out, returning to growth this quarter. The economy contracted an annualised 2 percent in the first three months of this year as rising inflation driven by the weak yen made consumers more cautious about spending.

"A pick-up in transport equipment machinery will continue due to resumption of car factory activity. In addition, a recovery in demand overseas will help push up output of chip-making and other production machinery," analysts at SMBC Nikko Securities wrote in a note.

The poll of 18 economists found factory output likely grew 0.9 percent in April from a month earlier, following a 4.4 percent gain in March.

The Tokyo-area May core CPI, which excludes fresh food prices, likely accelerated to a year-on-year rise of 1.9 percent from 1.6 percent in April due to an increase in renewable energy levy.

The CPI data, which serves as a leading gauge of inflation, will be published on May 31.
