BTS' Suga sets record with 15m YouTube likes

BTS member Min Yoongi, known more widely as Suga, has achieved a milestone as the first solo K-pop artiste to surpass 15 million likes on a YouTube music video, joining the ranks of rappers like Eminem, Drake, PSY, and XXXTentacion.

Suga's 2020 hit Daechwita from his album D-2 secured him a place in YouTube's 15-million-likes club. The song blends traditional Korean musical elements with contemporary hip-hop. The music video has amassed 460 million views on YouTube.

Named after the traditional Korean music used in royal processions, Daechwita delves into themes of ambition, self-exploration, and determination.

The 31-year-old rapper is presently completing his military duty in South Korea alongside his BTS bandmates RM, Jimin, V, and Jungkook.

'Bachelor Point' teases anticipated return with new season

Directed by Kajal Arefin Ome, Bachelor Point has become one of the most popular shows in recent years. Speculation about a new season has been building, and Ome recently fuelled excitement by hinting at its production.

In recent Facebook posts, the director and other team members of the project mentioned the word "Five."

According to Ome, Season 5 may premiere early next year and will bring back fan-favourite characters such as Pasha, Habu, Shuvo, Kabila, and Antora.

Discussing the timeline, Ome commented, "I might make Bachelor Point 5. However, I can't specify exactly when viewers will be able to watch it, as everything is still being finalised."

Since its debut in 2017, the series has charmed audiences with its hilarious story centred around a group of bachelors. The fourth season concluded with its 116th episode on December 24, 2022.

Exploring South Asian folklore in horror films

MAISHA ISLAM MONAMEE

As Halloween is here, the eerie atmosphere stirs not only a fascination with the supernatural but also a deeper exploration of how folklore and myth have been immortalised in art, literature, and, especially, films. South Asia, with its rich cultural traditions, offers a vast source of ghost stories, demonic legends, and spiritual mysteries.

One of the most pervasive themes in South Asian horror is the figure of the vengeful spirit, particularly the 'churail' or 'petni', female ghosts born of betrayal or injustice. These spirits often symbolise the deep-seated anxieties around gender, power, and societal repression. In folklore, these women were wronged during their lives, often suffering violence or injustice, and returned from the dead to seek revenge. In the Indian horror comedy Stree (2018), the churail is reimagined, turning a folklore-based ghost into a feminist symbol. The film cleverly plays with the fear surrounding these spirits while commenting on the societal treatment of women.

Possession, often by 'jinns' or malevolent spirits, is another deeply rooted theme in South Asian storytelling. The idea that one's body could be overtaken by supernatural forces reflects cultural concerns over control, particularly the loss of personal agency. One such film, Debi (2018), explores the theme of possession, where the protagonist, Ranu, has inexplicable visions and encounters with a deity-like figure. The film draws on the belief in the supernatural powers of certain individuals, especially women, who are seen as mediums for divine or spiritual entities. This reflects the folklore surrounding devi possession or spiritual enlightenment, where women are often depicted as having a deeper connection to the supernatural, either as goddesses, witches, or mediums.

The concept of curses that pass down through generations is also a recurring theme in South Asian folklore and has been adapted into film narratives. This idea of inescapable family curses was portrayed in Tumbad (2018), where a family's greed invites the wrath of an ancient deity. South Asian horror films frequently delve into stories where ancestral curses are revisited upon current generations, forcing characters to reckon with their past. These themes align closely with the Hindu-Buddhist concept of karma, where the moral consequences of past actions reverberate into the present.

This folklore is filled with stories of shape-shifters, particularly the nagini (serpent woman) and rakshasas (demonic beings), who can alter their forms to deceive humans. These creatures embody the fear of the unknown and the anxiety surrounding deception and transformation. Hava (2022), set at sea, delves into the mystical world of supernatural forces tied to the waters. As a group of fishermen embarks on a journey, strange occurrences unfold, with one of the crew members suspected of being a nagini or sea spirit. These figures often reflect societal fears around the control of women's sexuality and the power that comes with it.

In Bhool Bhulaiyaa (2007), reincarnation and past lives are used to explain the supernatural events. The film explores the concept that unresolved issues from past lives can carry over into the present and that spirits may linger until they find closure. This reflects Hindu beliefs about the cycle of life, death, and rebirth, where unresolved karma can haunt individuals across lifetimes.

South Asian folklore places significant emphasis on haunted spaces—abandoned houses, desolate palaces, and cursed villages—where spirits are said to linger. These places are often depicted as being imbued with the trauma and pain of those who once lived there. In Chompa House (2022), the plot revolves around a family house that holds dark secrets and possibly a curse passed down through generations. The house itself becomes a character, much like the haunted spaces in South Asian folklore that carry the weight of past trauma and unresolved family issues.

Horror films, deeply rooted in South Asian folklore, hence truly provide a fascinating lens into cultural fears, spiritual beliefs, and societal anxieties.

Anirban Bhattacharya to debut his band

Anirban Bhattacharya who successfully captivates audiences on screen and stage, with acting seemingly in his blood, is also a talented singer.

The actor, trained in stage singing from an early age, gained acclaim for songs like Kichchu Chaini Aami in Shah Jahan Regency and Michael Vidyasagar Sangbad with Anupam Roy. Credited as a vocalist in multiple films, he's received praise for live performances.

Now, he's set to join the music scene in a new role with his band, Hooliganism, formed with longtime friends.

The band, led by Anirban and music director Subhadeep Guha, features nine members, including Debraj Bhattacharya, Sushruta Goswami, Someswar Bhattacharya, Krishanu Ghosh, Nilansuk Datta, Pritam Das, and Pritam Deb Sarkar.

Hooliganism will debut with original Bengali songs written by Anirban, who informed the media, "Our nine-member band has recorded 12 songs, now being mixed. We've done a few trial shows with great audience feedback."

The freshly formed band will make its official debut at a Kolkata gallery this December.
